Bates was a Girl Scout member for well over 70 years. She gave the greater part of her services to Cohasset as a leader, a camp trainer, and song leader, from 1953 until well into the 1980s. One of Bates' former Girl Scouts said 'Dot helped each of us believe in ourselves and never to give up. She encouraged us to strive for our goals regardless of how minimal they might seem to others. She demonstrated consistent caring and sharing to all who came in contact with her.'

Helen Storrow Heritage Award was given in memory of Dorothy Beesley Bates in hopes that her achievements and successes will always be recognized as a significant part of Girl Scouting. Beesley Bates was a continuing source of inspiration to girls and volunteers.

Advisors agree with SAFE

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

(Note: The Cohasset Mariner went to press Wednesday evening before town meeting on June 26. Next week the Mariner will report on how town meeting reacted to the SAFE resolution)

After a night of heated debate, the advisory committee voted 5-1 in favor of a resolution, authored by SAFE (Stop Any Further Expansion), to oppose the acceptance of any Massachusetts Water Resource Authority sewer residuals at the Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL).

The resolution also authorizes selectmen and other town agencies to take "whatever steps necessary" to insure that Cohasset is not selected as a disposal site for any MWRA sewer system."

During the debate, members of SAFE questioned whether Wayne Sawchuk of the advisory board should participate.

Sawchuk, who admitted being a paid consultant for CHL owner Paul Barry for the past seven years, said he was not in favor of the plan and was not biased. He agreed not to vote on the resolution after continued pressure both on and off the board.

Selectmen have already voted not to encourage or support any MWRA use in town.

Barry is attempting to expand his landfill to nearly twice its existing size. He has also contacted the MWRA about the possible purchase of the landfill for the disposal of "grit and screenings (particles such as plastic that are too large to pass through filters)" from water treatment plants on Deer Island.

According to MWRA executive director Paul Levy, the authority is in the process of siting a landfill for this material in Walpole.

He said that although he would not be in favor of siting the landfill in Cohasset, or any other town outside the MWRA district, he has no "vested interest in the Walpole site."

Because of a campaign promise made by Governor William Weld that the state would not burden Walpole with an MWRA dump site if it was not wanted, an appointed committee is now compiling a list of potential alternate sites.

The meetings have been closed to the public and in closed-door meetings no one is claiming to know whether Cohasset is one of the sites on the list.

SAFE is arguing that Cohasset should not allow or encourage any deals with the MWRA for a dump site.

A report SAFE delivered to the advisory board, said that once the landfill is sold to the MWRA, it would have the power to override local boards, such as the board of health.

The MWRA could then dump "sludge, scum, or anything else they want to," according to the report.

SAFE also contends the expansion and possible MWRA use could pose a threat to the town's major drinking water supply, Lily Pond, which is less than one mile away from the landfill.

Other concerns include severe odor problems, harmful affects to the environment, a lowering of property values and reduced tourism revenues.

According to the report, if the expansion and sale were to occur, Cohasset would be saddled with the landfill for years to come, at a time when the rest of the state is trying to get rid of them.

"If it was only a dump for grit and screenings at 4-5 trucks a day, the dump could be there for up to 185 years...in operation up to June 2176, the 400th anniversary of the Declaration of Independence," the report read.

Kevin O'Donnell, an attorney who is a member of SAFE, told the board that the Secretary of Environmen-

CHS students launch local nautical history

By Peter Kasperowicz
Special to the Mariner

A gigantic, rotting lawn ornament was seen cruising around the harbor last Saturday.

Actually, it used to be a rotting lawn ornament. Now, thanks to alternative school students and many CHS faculty, it is a fully-restored Monomoy surf boat named the John Warren II.

Alternate school director Jack Buckley described the rebuilding process as educational. "I learned a lot from Mike McNabb, who was hired as a professional shipwright. He fixed up the hull and the keel to make sure they were seaworthy.

"Listen to me. Before this I didn't even know what the parts of the boat were," Buckley said. Faculty members Bill Kite, Dave Magnussen, Colleen Lucas and Jody Wood joined Buckley's efforts to get the boat ready for the water in time.

Buckley's students manned the boat during last Friday's launching ceremony. Ed McCabe, rowing program director at the Hull Lifesaving Museum, spoke just before the christening.

"We had this boat in the back of the museum just waiting for the right opportunity. I'm real proud of what Jack's kids have done over the year," McCabe said. Buckley's students include Jon Maciel, Brendan Mulligan, Mike Equi, Jason DuMoulin, Chris Bartow, John Kiessel, Joe Clemmens, and Harry and Jason Curtin.

While the boat is owned by the Hull Lifesaving Museum, it remains on long-term lease to Cohasset students and others during the fall, spring and winter. "The yacht club is giving us one of their moorings, which is really great," McCabe said.

Marion Wheelwright christened the John Warren II with a rather untraditional bucket of harbor water after apologizing to anyone who might have gotten wet in the process. They decided not to use champagne because "alcohol and broken glass on the bottom of the harbor is against what we stand for," McCabe said.

Jack Hubbard, who sits on the museum board, thanked the more than 50 families who donated over $4,000 for the project. The ceremony had added significance in that the original John Warren was a surf boat from Cohasset.

"Cohasset actually had the first lifesaving station," Hubbard said. "It was set up by the Mass. Humane Society; they were forerunners of today's Coast Guard. The group was basically made up of doctors who were concerned that a lot of people were dying out on the water."

Original owners Jim and Nancy Mullen, of Marshfield, were there to watch the launching of their former lawn decoration. "It was always a project of mine. I started work on it but never got it done. It's changed greatly."

"It was nice to win our first home race, These guys worked so hard fixing up the John Warren II so it was even nicer."

Honoring history is one thing, but revenge is another. Surf boats aren't necessarily made for long-distance rowing, but that didn't stop the alternative school from reclaiming an old debt.

Last winter, CHS students were invited to Chelsea to race similar surf boats. McCabe said, "We called it the Chelsea Creek Ice-Breaker, and some of these students are still asking themselves why they voluntarily went through with it."

Despite the frigid weather, Cohasset managed to come in second place, right behind the Chelsea crew. Cohasset held a reciprocal race last Saturday after inviting Chelsea and a Hull women's crew. Cohasset entered both a men's and a women's crew.

Cohasset men pulled away from the Hull women in the final race and won by nearly four minutes.

"It was nice to win our first home race," Buckley said. "These guys worked so hard fixing up the John Warren II so it was even nicer."

Coxswain Jon Maciel said, "We were a little discouraged; we kind of lost control of the boat at the start, but we got it back. We wanted to win by about four minutes, and we did."

Buckley presented Maciel with the victory plaque designed by Colleen Lucas. "To the victors in the first o many races," Buckley said, alluding to a possibl return to Chelsea this winter.

Buckley and McCabe are teaming up this summer race surf boats in Hull. "We're trying to establi something like a summer racing camp, and hopefu we can draw students from Hull, Cohasset, Hingha and anyplace else," Buckley said.

"Today was a lot of fun. It involved more than just alternative school students. It's really something that brings people together." Anyone interested in crewing this summer can contact Mr. Buckley at the high school, 383-6100.

Don't let appearances fool you; the John Warren II is a fast boat. McCabe said, "It's a heavy boat but it's easy to row, partly because it's still very dry."

MBTA sinks Gracious Lady

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

In a move to trim its budget for commuter boat service, the Massachusetts Bay Transit Authority has eliminated the subsidy for one of its two providers.

Dana Goodell's Boston Harbor Commuter Service was named as sole provider last week by the MBTA board of directors.

William Spence, who has been operating commuter boat service through Massachusetts Bay Lines for more than 30 years, lost both his MBTA contract and subsidy after being beaten by Goodell in bidding for the service.

In addition to eliminating Spence's subsidy, the MBTA will reduce the ferry service by three daily roundtrips.

No word on what trips will be eliminated has been announced.

The move is expected to reduce the MBTA's annual subsidy for the service from nearly $3.2 million to $2.6 million.

The Gracious Lady and Massachusetts, two boats in Spence's fleet, will be taken out of service Sept. 3.

Spence's company, which also runs boat excursions, will have to lay off as many as 20 persons because of the move; Goodell said he plans to hire at least four new employees.

The action came after a mandate by the MBTA advisory board to cut costs and subsidies for the service.

Commuter boat service gradually has been losing its client base since late 1989 when fares rose from $3 to $4 each way, according to a report issued by the MBTA advisory committee.

The MBTA is anticipating a 7 percent loss of ridership for fiscal year 1991.

In response to the mandate, the directors asked both providers to bid on an exclusive contract. Spence's bid was nearly $200,000 more than Goodell's.

The exclusive contract runs from from Sept. 3 to June 30, 1992.

According to the report, funding approved for the commuter boat service last year used ridership estimates that "proved to be overly optimistic."

"In the fall of 1989, the FY '91 subsidy per passenger was figured at $3.50 per person. The falloff in patronage has pushed the current subsidy to $5.20 per person," the report reads.

"The state cannot afford any further increase. It is clear that in tough times not enough commuters can afford to subscribe to this luxury commute to support the proposed level of service at a reasonable cost to the taxpayer."

The announcement coincides with the unveiling of a new high-speed vessel that will commute between Hull and Boston.

According to Jeffrey Parker, general manager for the Nantasket Water Transportation Company (Nantransit), the company will begin year-round marine transit service between Nantasket and Boston Sept. 9.

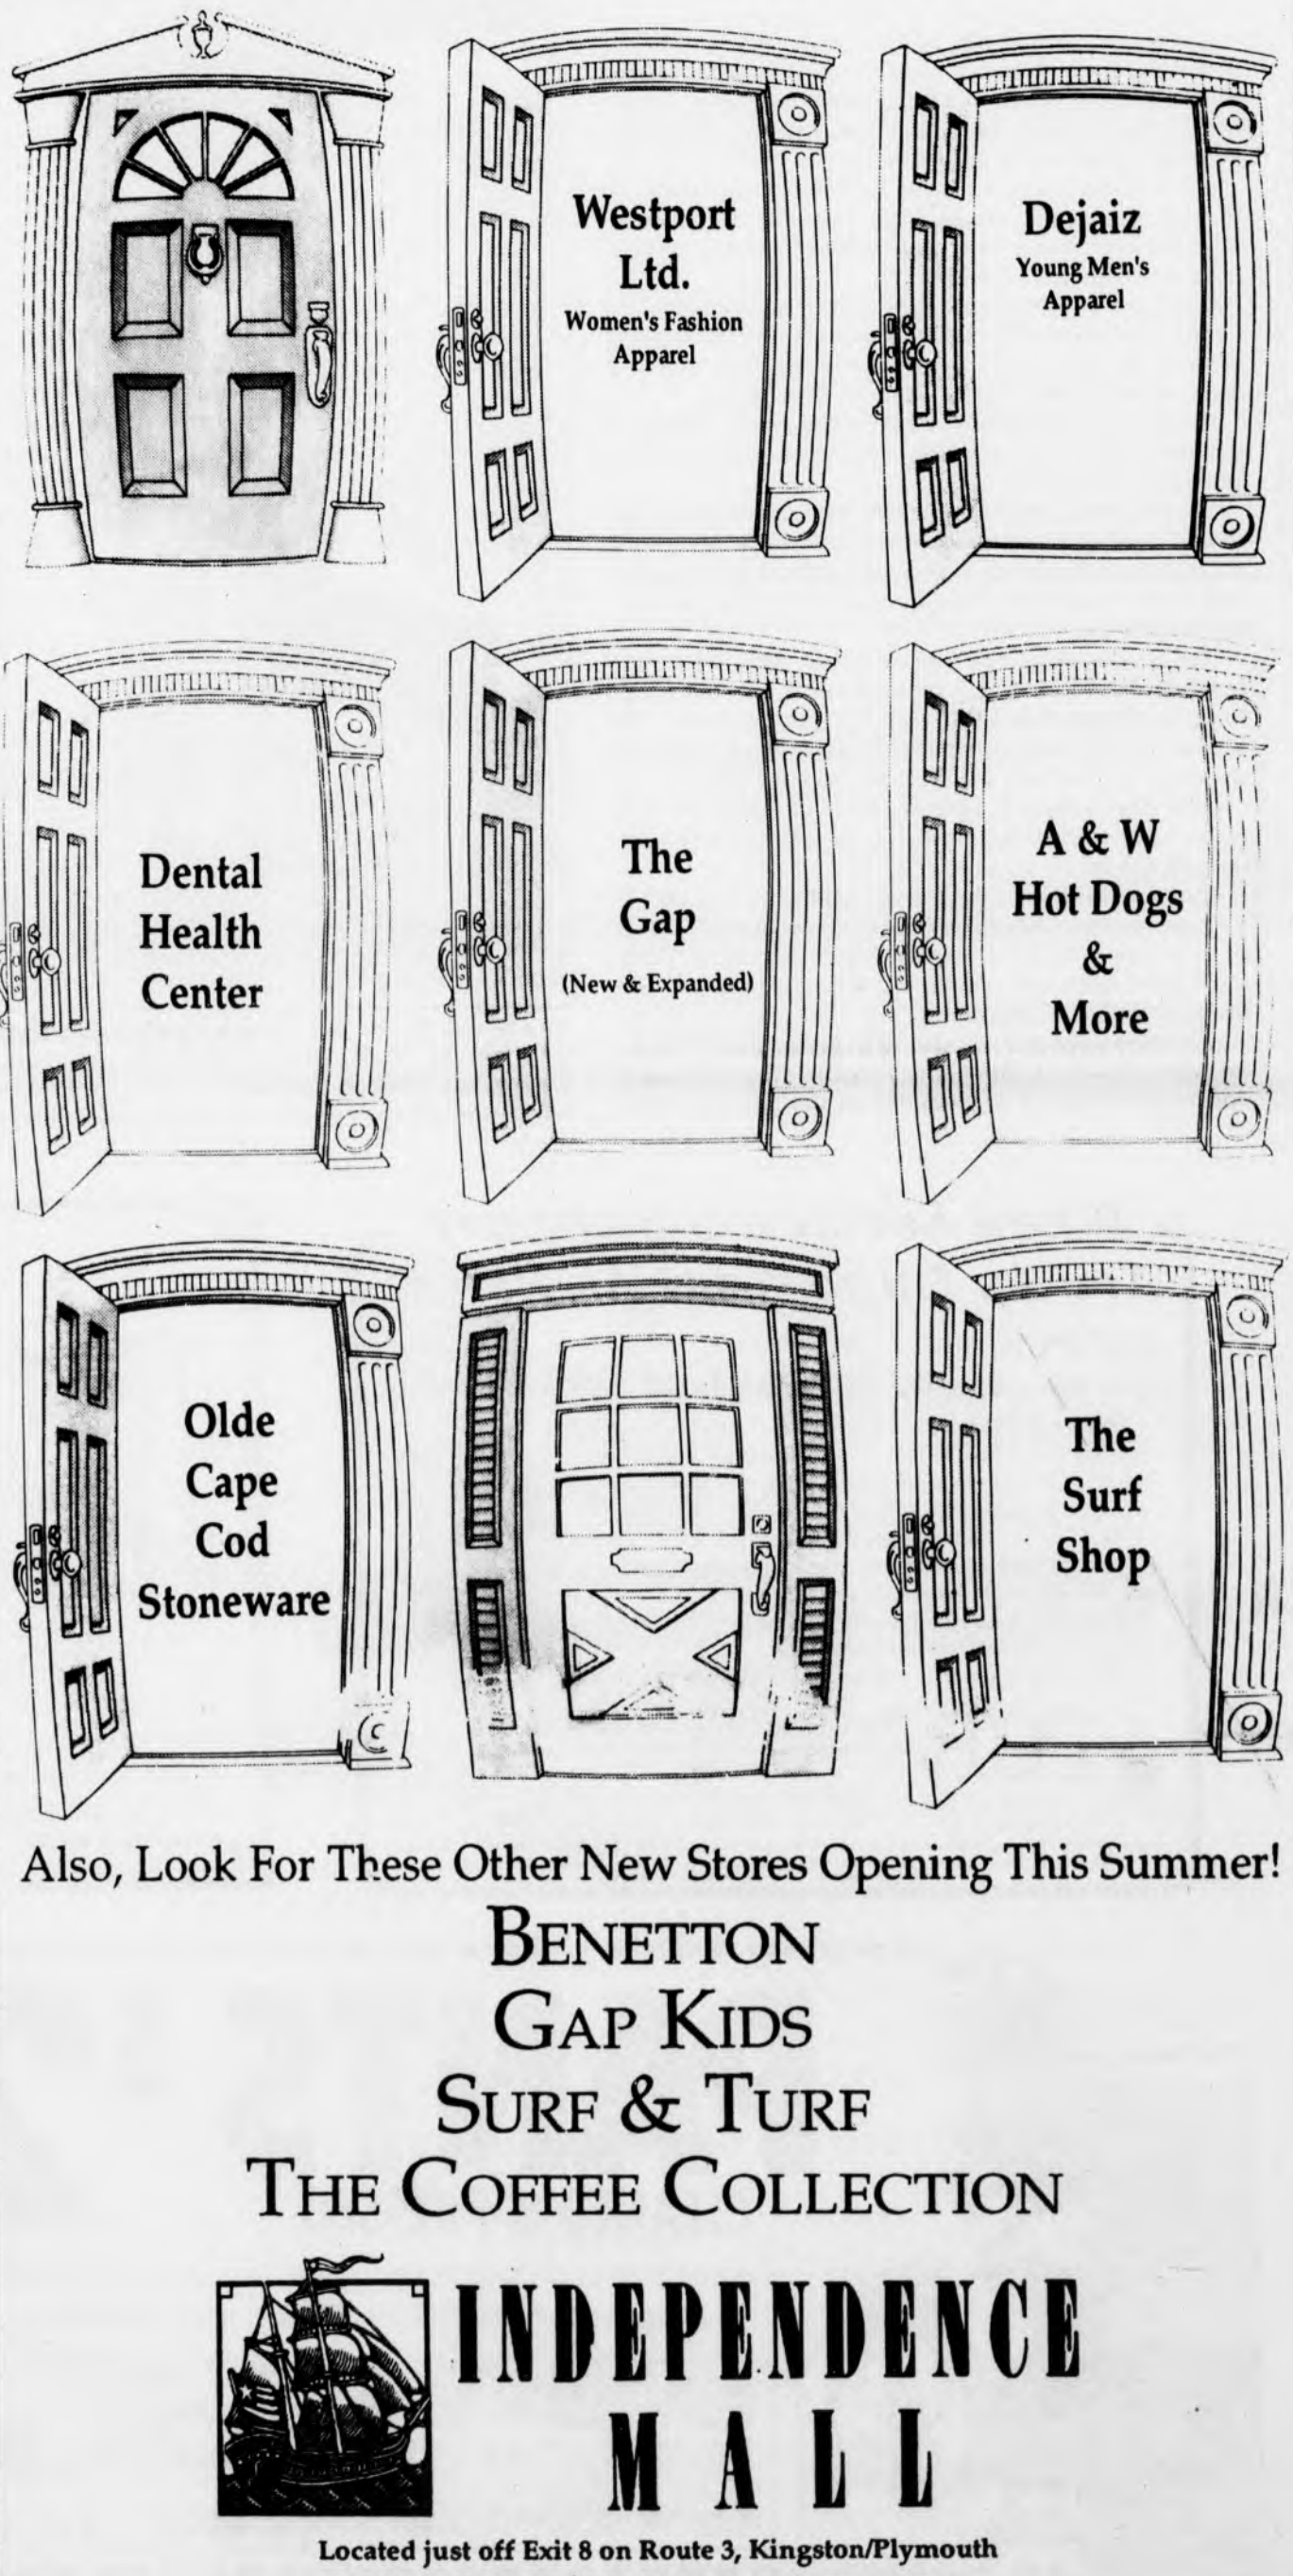
The new service will offer six roundtrips daily between approximately 6 a.m. and 8 p.m.

During the Christmas shopping season the service will run Saturday trips; in spring 1992, weekend service will be added along with weekend whalewatching trips.

Nantransit will use the Cape Cod Clipper, provided by Captain John Boats of Plymouth, according to Parker.

On July 13,14 and 26 and Aug. 23 the boat will make introductory excursions to benefit several Hull organizations, according to Parker.

He said Nantransit has been "diligently pursuing" the service for a long time, and it now has the support of the MBTA and several state agencies.



The Urban Mass Transportation Administration, which has funded $60,000 for planning analysis, may offer a $160,000 grant toward startup costs, Parker said.

He said three separate attempts to get the service sailing during the past two years have failed for a number of reasons, including a lack of suitable vessels, and a "truly unusual obstacle" posed by rising fuel costs due to the Persian Gulf crisis.

Students make their plans for summer . . .

Congregational Church.

Rest also awaits four retiring teachers at Cohasset Junior/Senior High School. The last day of school ended their careers.

For 38 years, Patricia Wunschel taught home economics. She ran the school cafeteria, gourmet cooking classes, and a pre-chef program. But Monday, June 17, she was a guest in the cafeteria at a luncheon to honor her and the three other retiring teachers, Tom Hughes, Ed Leach, and Doris Lahage.

At the luncheon, each teacher received a golden apple—on tie tacks for the men, on chains for the women.

A video shown at the luncheon, filmed by teacher Ginny Banks, featured students and colleagues praising and reminiscing about the retiring teachers. "Many tears were shed over that," said Doris Lehage, Cohasset's business teacher for 24 years.

While these teachers leave for good, many children leave their old schools and graduate to new schools. The day before school ends is called "moving-up day" for many kids in Cohasset.

Children visit the class they will be in next September. For Mrs. Schadhauser's third grade class at the Osgood school this meant a trip to the Deer Hill School where they will enter the fourth grade in September.

These students eat in a cafeteria and pay a cashier for the first time next year, so they were excited about learning what to do.

One student complained, "The cafeteria seats are too small," and they were all disappointed that the slush puppy machine which makes flavored ice was broken. Other than that, Mrs. Schadhauser's class felt ready for the transition.

The students toured the building, met their new teachers, and some got to write an essay on what would happen if kids ruled the world. The new rules: "We would get $100 allowance every day, stay up as late as we want, and school would last one hour a day."

Until that happens, kids will have to make the most of the chaos, cleaning, and fun which mark the last days of school.

The end of school often means field trips too, and all Osgood classes visited the Paul Pratt Memorial Library in the last couple of weeks where Suzanne Terry, children's librarian, explained the summer reading program called WizardRead.

At the Deer Hill school, the sixth grade students who are moving up to the Junior/Senior High School in September enjoyed a ceremony in their honor at the Cohasset Music Circus.

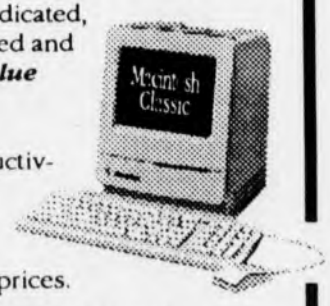
Two students, Jonathan Crafts and Catherine Campbell, won the Athletic/Scholastic/Citizenship Award. A student from Mrs. Magnussen's sixth grade class, Jacqueline Hurley, gave a speech thanking her Deer Hill teachers: "You've helped me through grades four, five, and six; I don't know about the rest of the kids, but I needed it badly."

A break is what everyone else seemed to need badly—even the school-bus drivers.

Marie Powers has been driving school buses for over 30 years, and on the last day of school she was anxious for a rest. "The kids are all good, but when they're together they each try to talk louder than the next one. I'm looking forward to the summer, looking forward to spending some time with my daughter."

The kids piled into her bus for the last time, and it lumbered out of the driveway.

School was over for the next 77 days—until September 5.



The South Shore Art Center exhibit on Cohasset Common is always a big draw to the summer festival. This exhibit includes the paintings, photographs and sculptures that captured the top awards in the annual art festival contest. (Jodi Rome photo) do not understand the process they get frustrated and complain. The selectmen should find out if the complaints are valid."

Waal said he has suggested selectmen should meet with the commission to discuss any problems.

"I agree that we do have a public relations problem, he said, announcing that the commission is now working on a pamphlet for townspeople that explains how the commission works.

Waal said no one on the commission is "politically connected" and it has tried to do the right thing.

"I think we have tried to act fairly and consistently," he said. "One of the things I have tried to bring to the commission is consistency. If something is incorrect for one person it is wrong for another."

He said applying the same standards and regulations to all developers, landowners and town agencies, regardless of their intentions, may be another bone of contention for the commission's detractors.

Waal said he hopes the issue is "settled soon."

"I am taking it in stride, I know I am trying to do a good job and people are not complaining to me personally."

He said making one person the scapegoat for the commission's unpopularity is unfair.

"I am only one-seventh of the commission," he said. "If I was the only one who was wrong I would be outvoted all the time."

Brown, who is the chairman of the commission, said uncertainty over the reappointments has made the last few weeks difficult.

"We have all been through a lot," he said.

"I feel the people on the board right now are working very hard," he said, explaining that all three of them were heavily involved with drafting town by-laws and regulations for the commission last year.

Brown said individual selectmen have assured him his job is safe, but he said he was still worried.

"I do not agree with how they (selectmen) have gone on about it," he said.

"The things we are hearing complaints about are the things we have no control over," he said, admitting that the board has not explained any specific complaints or dissatisfaction.

"They are not telling us what the specific complaints are other than we are not the best liked board in town," Brown said. "They did not sit down with us and discuss their problems.

"I hope it is not just a political thing, but I have a feeling it is."

Brown said the board is leaving the commission "in the air" by not explaining the situation.

"I just hope it is resolved pretty soon, and that we can discuss (the problems) fully once all the dust settles," he said.

Brown said he did not expect to hear the board's decision until they meet in July.

Harborfest installed as a new tradition

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

Creativity was the order of the weekend as the town celebrated its first Harborfest.

A parade of elegant proportions, a traditional blessing of the fleet, a rock concert in the Village, water games and a chowder contest twined themselves around the usual — and spectacular — Art Festival produced by South Shore Art Center. It was the 36th annual art festival.

Meg Robbins, chairman of the festival, could be spotted at all the events.

Robert Martin, president of the chamber of commerce, said Harborfest will become a tradition.

"It is a tradition," Martin said. "I don't know why we didn't do it before.

"The most important thing is getting people together and this succeeded."

Crowds of people showed up for all the Harborfest activities.

The parade, Sunday afternoon, was simple with about 30 components included in the line of march. Officials including the town's selectmen and State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, were assembled in a reviewing stand on the route. People crowded everywhere to watch. Crowd estimates from police put the numbers in the thousands.

Keith Knowles served as parade marshall.

A cruiser driven by Police Sgt. Brian Noonan led the line.

The American Legion provided a color guard followed.

The Hingham Militia continued to fire musket volleys as they trotted along the route.

The first float honored Desert Storm with a "Welcome Home. Great Job" theme. The float was assembled by Jean Salvador.

Cohasset Fire Department's Ladder 21 was next.

A 1953 fire engine, courtesy of Glenn Pratt, was filled with banners of the Social Service League. Public Health Nurse Judy Fitzsimmons rode the pumper's tailgate.

Williams said the film crew of about 80 people would probably not be staying in town.

He said it was difficult to give out many specifics of the planned Cohasset shoot because the schedule "changes on a daily basis."

He said he would not have any firm details until after an upcoming discussion with the director.

Family education loan brochures at library

Every year over 400,000 students and their families try to finance the cost of education at Massachusetts colleges and universities. Financial aid award letters have been received by many, and some families will need supplemental loan funds to pay their tuition bill.

The Massachusetts Educational Financing Authority's Family Education Loan Program is available at 52 public and independent Massachusetts college and universities. Specific information about the program is in a brochure.

"I like to tell my people about the availability of the Family Education Loan Program. A few brochures are at the libraries in my district, Cohasset, Hingham and Hull. Last year the visibility of the program was greatly enhanced by the efforts of the Members of the legislature. The volume of the loan programs increased by 35% from the previous year. The brochures provide information about this financing option to my constituents who need help," said Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset.

The Massachusetts Educational Financing Authority is a below-market 9.25 percent interest rate — the lowest in its eight year history — on the Family Education Loan program for the 1991-92 academic year.

The 9.25 percent fixed rate means families pay only $10.95 each month, per thousand dollars borrowed, for the loan's 15-year repayment period. This is the lowest publicly offered, fixed rate educational loan available to consumers in the nation.

The loan program provides a supplemental source of financing for

Credibility

In recent weeks we have been listening to debates and reading articles about the credibility of the press.

It's contradictory, for while most Americans — about 80 percent according to one Gallup poll — view journalism favorably, the public disbelieves the press — print and electronic.

It is held only in slightly higher regard than government and its politicians.

According to the Washington Journalism Review, the general public is more supportive of the press, not when a wrongdoing or transgression is disclosed but after the fact, when the subject individual has been brought to task or, in the worst case, convicted.

One of the most striking examples of this attitude goes back 19 years ago this month when the Watergate break-in occurred.

As the story began to unravel, the public's opinion of the press plummeted. It was not until it was indisputably clear in nearly everyone's mind that President Richard Nixon was involved in a coverup that the public began to believe in the press.

Now, the media can expect press bashing again while the history of Iran-contra is regurgitated among authors and talk show hosts and the news media for the consumption of the general public while the nomination of Robert Gates to the top post in the Central Intelligence Agency or the suggested retrial former Marine Lt. Col. Oliver North is debated.

We would not censor their comments, but we suggest that with our freedom of speech comes an awesome responsibility to be fair and accurate.

Which brings us to yet another article about the media, at least indirectly.

A recent Wall Street Journal article reported that the American Association of Advertising Agencies is concerned about negative political advertising and its new president wants to hold the industry to some standards.

That includes adopting a code of conduct which would avoid mudslinging of an opponent and would insist on completely identifying the sponsors of the political ads.

The media, in covering campaigns find themselves incorporating the worst of political ads in their news reports to sell news and chasing opponents for reaction, often escalating the frenzy.

Advertising and journalism are becoming obscured into a mix of "infoentertainment," and in the process, the credibility of the press is lost and the public is cheated.

How do you see the media?

Is print more believable than television news?

What newspaper(s) do you read?

What radio news broadcasts do you rely on?

What is your favorite talk program — on radio, on television?

Who is your favorite television news personality — locally and nationally?

Conversely, what won't you read or listen to or watch?

We hope you will respond. Send your replies to Credibility, Cohasset Mariner, Box 71, Cohasset MA 02025.

Then I told Red to trade "The Chief!"

By Tanna Kasperowicz

commentary

We wonder if when all is said and done, TT selectmen will truly achieve their goal(s) of upgrading TT government boards and committees by throwing people off committees who want to continue to serve. They're always complaining about having no one interested in serving on Tinytown boards and committees. This is an untruth. Start going to Troika meetings and see how many people are not appointed because they are not politically correct. (Note to New Tinytown junkies, the Troika is an appointing authority composed of the TT selectchair, TT moderator, and the TT advisory chair).

The three conservation commission people up for reappointment this year are certainly competent, and have served the conservation commission loyally and well. In fact, all three have better resumes than a majority, if not all, of the TT selectpeople.

Initially, it looked like TT selectpeople were after the whole commission. But, after actively recruiting people all over Tinytown, they realized that 100s of people weren't vying to serve on this particular commission, which quietly eats up a lot of hours. If TT selectpeople follow through with their threat to remove one commissioner, after having insulted the entire commission, few Tinytown residents will opt to take slots and pops from TT selectpeople in the future. I guess.

A few years ago I mistakenly told Red Auerbach to trade Robert Parish for having missed important foul shots all year. Thank goodness Red didn't listen, and the following four or five years of Parish's career were his best ever.

Well, TT Selectperson Rocco Laugelle doesn't make all his foul shots either, but he made two important ones last week. First of all he recognized the TT selectmen's vendor mess for what it was and said so; second, he (along with TT Selectperson Martha Gjesteby) refused to sign a strange statement made by the other TT selectpeople with regard to the fire chief. Seems a majority of the board is writing stuff and deciding stuff outside of posted meetings. Maybe TT Selectchair Ned Tebbetts will give us a statement about this next week.

The TT Selectpersons' statement, signed by TT Selectchair Tebbetts, and Selectpersons Diana Kornet and Jane Goedecke stated that Cohasset's fire department budget ($1 million) is "disproportionate for a town" of its size (very, very tiny, as you are well aware). Now, I'm assuming Rocco and Martha refused to sign it because, of course, they know the TT selectpeople manage the TT fire department and its budget, and negotiate minimum manning, etc., all the elements of a contract which hold the chief pretty helpless with regard to holding down costs.

Not only was the statement in poor taste, it blamed the chief for something TT selectpersons control (or should control), making many of us out here wonder if they know how to manage this department. They do this kind of stuff alot (blame other people). On June 24 Selectperson Kornet asked one of the Sandy Beach vendors how he would solve the problem of too many vendors on the beach, a problem TT selectpeople created.

Earlier this year TT Advisory Committee Chair Arne Gjesteby told the TT selectpersons that barring an override, there would only be two areas of the town where downsizing could take place: the fire department and the schools. Well, you can betcha they didn't like to hear that from him, their being an elected, policy-making board and him being just one of their yucky advisor creatures. TT selectpeople were very short with Mr. Gjesteby. So, when they recently discovered Mr. Gjesteby was exactly correct, they blamed the TT fire chief.

TT citizens should note here that no statement was necessary. TT selectpersons could have quietly voted to not renew the chief's contract and none of us would be the wiser.

Sad news for Tinytown. Dan Leahy has resigned as manager of Kimball's By-the-Sea effective this Sunday. Dan was the recipient of the first Cohasset Chamber of Commerce's Forest E. King award, and it was well-deserved. Also, he served as the Chamber's first president for a number of years, wrote its first bylaws, and brought businesses on the sea, in the village and on CJC highway together for perhaps the first time ever. No mean feat.

If you'd like to do something important for Dan and Kimball's, write a little note to Ms. Jane M. Peterson, Executive Director, c/o the Outdoor Advertising Board, 10 Park Plaza, Rm. 7141, Boston, MA 02116. Tell her you love Kimball's sign on Route 3A.

Quit smoking and start living

To the Editor:

People who quit smoking live longer than those who continue to smoke. According to the American Lung Association, almost two-thirds of smokers want to quit. In fact, more than 38 million Americans have quit smoking cigarettes.

On July 3, Lung Associations across the country will rally support for NonDependence Day. This day, one day before our nation celebrates its independence, is the perfect time for smokers to kick their addiction.

Lung Association volunteers will make available at key outlets materials to help smokers in their efforts to quit.

Nicotine addiction is the most widespread example of drug dependence in our country today. Quitting isn't easy, and most smokers need several attempts before they are completely successful.

The Norfolk County-Newton Lung Association has self-help materials for people trying to quit smoking and also offers workplace programs to help smokers quit at their place of employment. In addition, the Association provides smokers an individual consultation service by appointment.

On NonDependence Day, newspapers as well as nonsmokers can offer encouragement to those smokers who are struggling to become free from their addiction. And smokers who want to quit can ask for all the help they need.

Quitting smoking is a matter of life and breath.

Joseph Godzik
President
Norfolk County-Newton Lung Association

Thanks to the kids of Konahasset

To the Editor:

The Cohasset Dramatic Club wishes to thank all the children and adults who participated in the historical skit "Kids of Konahasset" during the Arts Festival.

We especially appreciate the efforts of Greg Hussey, who substituted at the last minute for Scott Isbrandt as the Indian Chief who met Captain John Smith.

Despite the noise of traffic and crying babies (which we hope next year may be helped by a sound system), the skit was well received by all who gathered under the trees by St. Stephen's Church to watch.

many who qualify for financial aid and a primary source of assistance for those not eligible for aid.

The program's low monthly payments, fixed rate, and home mortgage option are attractive to consumers and help Massachusetts colleges compete nationally.

"The Authority is able to offer the lowest cost financing for colleges," Rep. Murray said, "because of the use of tax-exempt bonds, the support of participating colleges, and the positive payment history of borrowers. The program's default rate is only 1/2 of 1 percent. Education loan programs can be financially sound when everyone works together."

More than 21,000 loans totaling almost $160 million have been issued through participating colleges in conjunction with the Authority since 1983.

The Authority was created by the Massachusetts legislature in response to concerns about the affordability of higher education. In 1989, the Authority became the first supplemental loan program nationwide to be independently rated. Standard and Poor's and Moody's Investor Services gave an A rating to the Authority's bonds.

pumper, was drawn by two horses.

Bob Martin followed on foot, on cleanup detail.

Boy Scout Troop 28 assembled a float, under the direction of Merle Brown, including elements of Minot's Light, an Indian teepee and bubbles.

The Cosmo American Legion Band from Brockton offered the only music in the march.

The Girl Scout float also included assorted symbols.

Antique cars were driven in the line. Among those in the parade were cars driven by Walter Schroeder, Bob Julian and David Barrett.

The Recycling Center provided a float for Dump Princesses. The Children's Exchange was touted as a resource.

Jim Lagrotteria, looking debonair, led the Marching Mermaids — high school girls who twirled streamers for effect.

The Cohasset Dramatic Club marched in costume with a banner honoring the club's 70th year.

The Cohasset Community Center float included preschoolers and gymnastic champions.

The Council on Aging sent the Cohasset Strutters in uniform as its representative.

Two clowns from St. Anthony's marched.

The last element in the parade was the very heavy shiny brass dome that will soon be in place on Government Island as part of the Minot's Light replica.

The dome is the work of Herbie Jason. It was trucked from the work place of New England Steel Tank on a volunteer basis by Denka Trucking of Roslindale.

Noel Ripley, who is coordinating the project for the Historical Society, said the masonry work is finished. The dome will go on top late in July, according to the schedule. It will keep its glossy look thanks to a coat of varnish.

T-shirts to benefit the project have been donated by Ron Goodwin and WearGuard. The T-shirts show a picture of the lighthouse and say "1, 4, 3" which means "I love you."

The shirts are available for $10 each by contacting Ripley.

Donations may also be sent to the Captain's Walk.

The float included a small pitch for donations, needed to complete the lighthouse replica which is already worth about $60,000.

"We need money badly," Ripley said.

The lighthouse T-shirts were in competition with others on sale throughout the weekend. One set of T-shirts in various colors advertised the group that played at the youth concert Saturday evening. The Village itself was turned into a street festival as South Main from Elm to Brook streets was barricaded.

Stars of Hingham won the Chowder Competition. Long lines sampled chowder from seven competing restaurants.

Even the youth of the community were included in the Harborfest offerings.

High tension, a local rock band, played for two hours to a crowd that numbered in the hundreds. The event was the Harborfest Committee's offering for teen-agers.

To create a stage, young men from the high school, led by Carlo Lagrotteria, built a bandstand using wood donated by Hingham Lumber Company.

Rik Tinory Productions of Cohasset was responsible for the donation of the talent and technology needed to provide the concert.

High Tension is a band with a following. The group was applauded long and loud by the kids gathered. Some families and older residents just watched.

Earlier in the evening, the South Shore Concert Band, under the direction of Richard Whitmarsh, performed a pops sort of selection.

Saturday afternoon Cable Channel 53 broadcast live from Cohasset Common, focusing on the artists and craftspeople, under the direction of Bob Belliveau.

Belliveau and Wigmore Pierson were seen at the Thursday night champagne preview at the Art Center. It was the first time in four years the two took off on a Thursday night in season. At that very time, Pierson's program was being broadcast on tape on Channel 53 since Gen. Robert Neal of Hull had been interviewed ahead of schedule.

Trade Winds performed at the Art Center with skill. The group includes Colleen Foley, Colleen Lucas, Sharon Weber and Karen Wesaloski.

Inside the Art Center was the President's Choice display by Ali, a members' show and a flower show — Art Interpretations — created by the Community Garden Club of Cohasset.

Harbor games were led by the CHS class of 1992.

The parade of boats filled the Harbor Sunday afternoon before the landlubbers parade. The Cohasset Clergy Association gathered together to bless the lobster fleet and pleasure craft that floated past a Coast Guard cutter stationed off the town pier for the event.

The clergy included: the Rev. Stephen Hall of Beechwood Congregational Church, the Rev. Edward Atkinson of First Parish Unitarian Universalist Church, the Rev. John Maheras of Panagia Greek Orthodox Church, the Rev. John Keohane of St. Anthony's Catholic Church, the Rev. E. Clifford Cutler of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, the Rev. Gary Ritts of Second Congregational Church and Srimata Gayatri Devi and Srimati Shuma Chakravarti of the Vedanta Center.

The pancake breakfast Saturday was sponsored by the Rotary Club at the Community Center with the help of the Council on Aging.

There are too many people who gave time, money and ideas to the weekend long project to list everyone.

Art lovers gathered at our annual festival

Peter and Jinni Fraser examine the RAKU pottery of Bob Hayden, while the artist looks on. Unlike most RAKU work, Hayden uses a variety of colors.

Sally Dean uses replicas of her original paintings to create unique clocks. The display at the art festival drew a lot of curious spectators.

Kit Bryant is busy completing a waterpaint demonstration. She's using the tent at the art festival as her subject.

Bookstore opens in village

Cohasset welcomed a new neighbor last weekend as the Little Harbor Bookstore opened its doors at 39A South Main St. in Cohasset Village.

The bookstore has been a lifelong dream of owner, Joan Call of Hingham.

Originally scheduled to open in July, Joan couldn't pass up Harborfest and meet some of her new customers. People entering the bookstore Saturday found a quiet haven from all the activities happening in town. The bookstore has a personal atmosphere where you can browse, or relax in the antique rocking chair.

Little Harbor Bookstore will keep you in touch with everything happening in the publishing world and provide you with the latest in locating and special ordering any book within days.

The Little Harbor Bookstore will be open Monday through Saturday 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. during the summer and Thursday evenings until 8 p.m. and Sunday, from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Night out for the boys

July 19, the Cohasset Community Center will be conducting another "Boys Night Out."

This "Boys Night Out" is specifically for the older boys. (Absolutely no one under the age of seven is allowed to participate).

Boys Night Out will begin at 5 p.m. and end at 7 p.m. Activities include: obstacle course, bowling, outdoor sports (weather permitting), hot dogs, chips, juice, and freeze pops.

The cost is $12. For more information call the center at 383-0088.

There is another "Boys Night Out" scheduled for August 9, from 6 to 8 p.m. for boys ages five to nine years.

Support group change

There has been a change in date on the Caregivers Support Group.

The date has been changed from Tuesday, July 2 to Tuesday, July 9 from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Cohasset Community Center.

If anyone has questions, call Sue Connolly at 383-9112.

Reception for artists

Thursday, June 27 from 6 to 8 p.m. there will be a reception to meet the artists that are exhibiting their work at the Barn at Bound Brook in Cohasset.

There are eight area artists whose work is on display:
Jean Abbott of Scituate, Photography.
Linda Cuff of Scituate, Watercolor/Acrylic on Paper;
Ros Farbush of Cohasset, Acrylic on Canvas;
Dorothy Palmer of Hingham, Mixed Media, Canvas;
Joanne Regan of Canton, Watercolor, Pastel;
Kathy Willing of Hull, Small Sculptures;
and Peter Michael Martin of Mattapoiset, Original Paper Cutting.

Ward conference

The annual Hingham Ward conference of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormon) will be held Sunday, June 30, at the chapel 379 Gardner Street, Hingham.

Starting at 10 a.m. and continuing until mid-afternoon some 25 visiting leaders from the "stake" (a larger geographical administrative unit) meet with their counterparts from the "ward" (the local congregation).

The Mormons are a lay church whose leaders are professional or business men who spend many hours each week on church assignments, without remuneration. Ward leaders receive training by stake leaders on a continuing basis.

In what may appear a fairly complex structure, the organization of the wards of the stake runs smoothly and effectively. Stake president, Robert S. Wood and his counselors meet with the local bishop and other unit leaders, monthly, as well as at the upcoming annual ward conferences.

Metric Olympics fun

Second graders recently participated in a mini-metric Olympics. Activities such as measuring the amount of milliliters in a sponge, how far they could throw a straw (in centimeters). How many grams a fistful of marbles weighs helped children gain experience in metric measurements in a fun way. There is a video of this event on the school video.

Old Timers and Leo's High School Tigers square off

By John Kinchla

Hockey "Old Timer" Ed Straughn found the range and with point-blank precision dismantled the youngsters in the third game in a series of seven games between the "Old Timers" and the Leo's Exxon High School Hockey Tigers.

Straughn, the father of four young children, teamed up with another "Old Timer" former Cohasset High sharpshooter and recent Belmont Hill graduate and Bowdoin-bound Brian Pompeo.

The Pompeo/Straughn connection rocked the youngsters. However, the "Old Timer" firepower was further enhanced by the Curran brothers, Sean and Tim, who dazzled the youngsters with their crisp passing and defensive daring.

Former Cohasset High and New Hampshire College student, Craig Mulcahy demonstrated the patented "Mulcahy Rush" as he went the length of the ice several times to shoot.

Mulcahy was foiled on several occasions by his brother, Hockey Tiger, Kevin. The younger Mulcahy, Kevin, played between the pipes for the Tigers and he was sensational.

Kevin, a South Shore League High School All Star Defenseman, traded in his defenseman's grab for goalie pads as he challenged "Old Timer" stars to take their best shot.

"Old Timer" speedsters, former St. Michael's skater, Bob Morgan, Nova Scotia born Mike Hubley and local attorney, Jay Monaco dazzled the youngsters. The kids had seen Morgan's adept backhand shot in previous games, yet he still scored his share. Hubley's puck control gave the kids fits. Monaco can squeeze through the smallest of openings and then he is gone.

Old Timer John Dean, played his usual steady game, refusing to surrender the puck and making his share of quality passes to teammates.

Old Timers, Jack and Joe Durkin, Bill Devine and Phil Smith never allowed the youngsters to mount a charge.

For the "kids", Defensemen Charlie Shields and Tim Conroy impressed. Shields is really rounding into shape. His play off the puck is improving with each game. Shield's leg speed is improving and he uses his body effectively to block the puck. Both Shields and Conroy have strength and heart.

Johnny Kinchla has developed into a beautiful skater. He skates backwards as fast as many high schoolers skate forward. He is developing confidence in his stick-handling ability and scored a goal for the kids against the "Old Timers."

The stellar two way play of Patrick and Mike Reynolds should make "Old Time" hockey enthusiasts happy. Both brothers play all out all the time. Mike scored against the Old Timers, while Patrick never stopped trying.

High School Sophomore, Brian Buckley, a late comer to organized hockey, remains enthusiastic. His skating is improving. He doesn't lack for courage.

Eighth Grader, Anthony Wigmore, is maturing as a player. Against the Old Timers, Anthony played a fine game and scored a goal.

Seventh Grade Tiger goalie, Jeff Tossi, is an exceptional talent. As a precautionary measure, Jeff was in the Old Timer net, and Kevin Mulcahy was in the Tigers net. Tiger Senior Goalie, Jeff Stone didn't play in this game.

The Giants are Champs!

By Dennis Ford
Minor League correspondent

After their first loss of the season to the Red Sox 11 to 2, the Giants came back and beat the Cardinals 11 to 6 and tied the Red Sox 1-1 in Saturday's season finale.

What a game to end the season. It was a pitching duel between Robby Moody of the Giants vs. Mike Kennedy for the Red Sox. Strong hitting performances by Mark Kupsc - a triple and a double; Nick Mincolla singled; and Andrew Ross singled and scored the only run for the Giants on the Mark Kupsc triple. Red Sox scored their solo run on a Mike Kennedy triple to rightfield scoring Robert Buckley.

Earlier Games

Red Sox 9 Cardinals 8

This was a real "nail biter." Both teams showed true team spirit in this contest, but the Red Sox were triumphant! The Cardinals' Dusty Pratt had two hits including a big triple and John Paul Laugelle had two hits too. Hunt Pile's pitching and John Paul Laugelle's strong relief were not enough to overcome the Red Sox. Bobby Morgan, Greg Parkinson, Andy Curran and Andy Singleton continued to be aggressive on the basepaths. Strong field performances were given by Bill St. Croix, Joshua Parisi, Sean Parkinson and Brian Hurley.

Red Sox 11 Giants 2

The Red Sox hammered the Giants, delivering their first loss of the season. Ryan Story contributed to the win with two "awesome" doubles and James Drybansky hit a triple. For the Giants, Robby Moody hit a triple and Jared Ford had two singles. Greg Connolly put in a strong performance in left field.

Giants 11 Cardinals 6

Robby Moody hit an "out of the park" home run causing a delay in the game until the ball could be found down by Papa Gino's! Eric Wenmark was awesome on the mound. Sergei Skoaupa hit a double and a single. Beth Pierson returned to the lineup after her one game absence (ballet) and walked.

Aaron Sawchuk performed well in center field. For the Cardinals, Coach Morgan tried unsuccessfully to stop the Giants by utilizing his pitching staff consisting of John Paul Laugelle, Greg Parkinson, Josh Parisi and Andrew Singleton. Dustin Pratt hit a powerful double

Major League playoff tournament action

This week's double elimination tournament has been an exciting finale for our major league teams.

Currently, the Mets and Dodgers are 2-0, the A's and Red Sox are 1-1, the Cards and Pirates are done for the season, and here's how it happened...

On Monday night, the Mets took on the expansion team Cardinals and the hits were flying through the air. Greg Taylor, who pitched for three innings and gave up only one hit was 5-5 himself at bat with a triple, a double and three singles! Tommy Leahy was 3-3, with one of each. J.L. Williams (3-5) had a triple and 2 singles, and Ely Kahn was 2-5 with doubles. Taylor Devin and Doug Cameron took two hits apiece from the Cards and Brian Walsh, Ramana Lagemann, Frank Abadie, Joel Puerro and Larry Adams all kicked in hits. The Mets ran the bases smartly, taking full advantage of this year's young Cardinals, and each performed great fielding to produce the win and get set on their way to the second round.

On Tuesday, the A's fought off the Pirates in a game to be reported on later.

Wednesday, the Dodgers beat the Sox when Justin Buckley pitched the entire game and did well. Lewis, Davis, Buckley, Belson and Bilton gave the Dodgers their hits. The outstanding play of David Marr, Tucker Gledhill and Bobby Stansill in the outfield and the excellent work of Lacks, Lewis, Davis, Bilton and Belson in the infield added up to a tremendous defensive game by the entire Dodger team and their first win on the way to playoff glory.

Thursday, the Mets returned to take the Pirates and on Friday the A's were defeated by the Sox. These games will also be reported on later.

Saturday's game turned out to be the last game of the Cardinal's first year. Matt Lewis struck out 11 to record a shut out victory for the Dodgers. He was assisted by the entire team in their second straight show of incredible defense. The Dodgers hit six triples. Mark Equi took one of them and a single. Tucker Gledhill hit a double. Bobby Stansill had three bases on his hit and David Hanson was 2-2 including his triple. Jeremy Williams was 2-2, including a triple as was Lewis. Greg Bilton had the sixth triple and a double, Burke Davis was 2-2 with a double, and Justin Buckley had a single. The Dodgers who have developed over the last three years to be a strong presence in the league are now tied with the Mets for first place. There's more action this week.

for the Cardinals.

A closing note: Thanks to all the coaches this year: Bob Moody - Giants; Jim Story - Red Sox; Bobby Morgan - Cardinals; and Rich Towle - Athletics. As parents, we sometimes forget all the time and effort given by these fine coaches, who also have full time jobs and still are able to fulfill their commitment of coaching a baseball team. As for the kids, the parents can be proud of all their efforts and improvements during the season. Hope everyone has a fun-filled and safe summer.

tal Affairs had "ripped the draft environmental impact statement (for the proposed expansion) to shreds."

He called the report "woefully inadequate" and flippantly graded it with an "F."

"As a result of publicity, real estate has already been adversely affected," he said. "How much more will real estate decline in this town if there is an actual siting of a sludge dump."

"It would be a shotgun wedding," he said explaining that the MWRA would only abandon its Walpole site if forced to do so bu the Governor. "It is not going to be a happy wedding...and afterwards we are going to ask for money and we are not going to get it."

Barry said the town has already voted their support of pursuing the issue.

"As far as I am concerned that was the democratic process," he said.

He said he was not looking for approval to sell the landfill, but to "keep communication lines open" and find out what the MWRA has to offer.

"All I am saying is open the door for a line of communication...then have a vote and say either thanks but no thanks, or yes, we can do it."

He said engineers have "come in time and time again and proven Lily Pond is not being affected" by his landfill.

Barry said the MWRA would be a "stable company" that could safely manage the landfill for years to come. He said he will not "own the landfill forever" and MWRA ownership could be the best way to protect the interests of the town.

Water commissioner Ronald Goodwin argued that engineering studies on the landfill's impact are inconclusive.

He said the expansion of the landfill could only do harm to the water supply.

"It is like mixing a drink, if you put two shots in it is going to be stronger than one shot," he said.

Keith Knowles, a resident of Border Street, said he did not see any reason to close any doors on the MWRA until more information was available.

"I have heard a lot of words tonight, but I have not heard many facts," he said. "I have heard the word sludge thrown around like a dirty word, like rape.

"I am not a proponent or an opponent, but I want more information and I am not getting it."

Goodwin said it would be dangerous for Cohasset to allow discussions.

"If Cohasset says we are interested in getting this, we are going to get it," he said.

Alix White of SAFE, urged the board to consider what could be at stake.

"I consider our water supply to be sacred...this is just something you do not fool around with," she said.

Barry said that protest against his plan has been "loud voices with no engineering experience."

He maintained that his landfill was not to blame for any water problems, and would cause any affect if expanded.

Five members of the board voted support of the resolution. Michael Putziger voted against the resolution, but clarified that his vote was not an approval of the expansion or a sale to the MWRA.

Sawchuk abstained after a debate on whether it would be a conflict of interest.

Festival winners listed by art center

After receiving nearly 400 entries for its Art Festival Juried Art and Photography Exhibits, the South Shore Art Center announced its Festival Awards for Excellence in the Arts. All the awards were donated by various businesses and art benefactors from the South Shore.

Rockland's Becky Haletky and Weymouth's Margaret Tittemore tied for Best of Show, representing what the jurors called "different ends of the artistic spectrum". First prize winners included Elizabeth Zadel of Cohasset for oil and acrylic, Linda Cuff of Scituate for watercolor, Virginia Lovejoy Allyn of Marion for drawing and pastel, Sara David Ringler of Barnstable for graphics, Brenton Welsh of Humarock for mixed media, and Don Wesley Alger of East Weymouth for sculpture and three-dimensional. No. Eastham's Ruth-Ann Emond took first place in color photography while Leslie Kilduff of Greenbush (Scituate) and Becky Haletky of Rockland won first for black and whites and special effects, respectively.

Capturing second and third place honors in the two exhibits were Tom Lucas, Laura Bonetzky, and Richard Alemian, all of Cohasset; Hanover's Paul Crimi and Jack Foley; Anne M. Belson of Wollaston and Guiliana Colarusso and LuAnn Radcliff of Quincy; Christopher D. Bernstein of Marshfield; Hingham's Wilfred Loring, Don Lettis, and Christopher R. Hidell; Janet C. Blagdon of Needham; George Stanchfield of Taunton; Nicolas Nobili of Eastham, and Alvina Laudani of Lexington.

Although judge Tony Andrade admitted the selection process "was not easy with such talent", several Art Center members were awarded in the Festival Members Exhibit. Cohasset's Tom Lucas, Janet C. Blagdon of Needham, Mary LoPiccolo of Bridgewater, and Weymouth's E. Mandeville Avery were cited.

Receiving honorable mentions in the members' exhibit were W. Neal Gray and Christine Hotarek of Scituate, Irena Roman and Judy Rossman of Scituate, Carolyn Harvey of Marshfield, Eleanor LeBlanc of Hull, Edward Minchin of Rockland, Katherine Smit of Duxbury, Margaret Tittemore of Weymouth, and Mary L. Moquin of Sandwich. Photography honorable mentions went to Jean Abbot of Scituate, Richard Alemian of Cohasset, Marcia Ganter of Milton, Christine Hotarek of Scituate, Norma McKenzie of Weymouth, and Susan White of Pembroke.

Special Awards in the juried art exhibit went to Esther Maschio of Scituate, Mary Callahan of Marshfield, Kimberley Alemian of Cohasset, R.H. Shreve of Duxbury, Beverly Rippel of South Easton and Janet Blagdon of Needham. Awarded honorable mentions were Marshfield's Brian Bierig, Dorit Flowers and Phyllis Howard; Elisabeth Mandeville Avery and Donna Lucas of Weymouth, Paul Crimi of Hanover, Eleanor LeBlanc of Hull, Phyllis Levine of Duxbury, Jean Reardon of Hingham, Rafe Terry and Mary McSweeney of Norwell, and Clement Micarelli of Cohasset.

Taking their motto, "Be Prepared" to an extreme, these Boy Scouts brought their own lighthouse to the harbor for Sunday's Harborfest parade.

Commentary

The necessity for consensus in a democracy is obvious. The methods for obtaining this agreement are various. Unlike totalitarian regimes or even authoritarian systems, which can use blatant forms of propaganda, democratic governments must rely on subtler forms of persuasion. These efforts at finesse may in fact be propaganda, all the more insidious because of their disguised nature.

Political scientists agree, democracies must hold better than 75 percent of the people in order for this most delicate of political systems to function. This is not to say that three-quarters of the people must agree on any given issue, it means simply, 3 out of 4 people must adhere to the democratic values in order to maintain the system.

Some issues however, do require an overwhelming consensus for them to be successfully resolved. War is the most conspicuous of such issues. The United States learned this lesson, among others, in the debacle that was the Vietnam War. As the war progressed and support first drifted and then headed down, the outcome was a certainty.

The loss in Vietnam was not a loss of valor or performance by U.S. troops. Rather it was a loss of will on the home front that first hindered and then handcuffed tactical procedure on the battlefield. Democracy's greatest asset...the will of the people, in a time of war became its greatest deficit.

This is not an argument for curtailment of the will of the people. It is an argument for understanding the informed will of a free people. Support for the effort in Southeast Asia was never deep. Americans, despite our propensity for personal violence, are not a warlike people. Foreign adventure, since the days of George Washington has always had a bad odor.

When the will of the American people is galvanized, as in World War II and Desert Storm, it becomes a steamroller loose on the highway of history.

Coming on the heels of frustration in recent foreign affairs, the Persian Gulf War once again saw the overwhelming consensus of the American people behind a war effort.

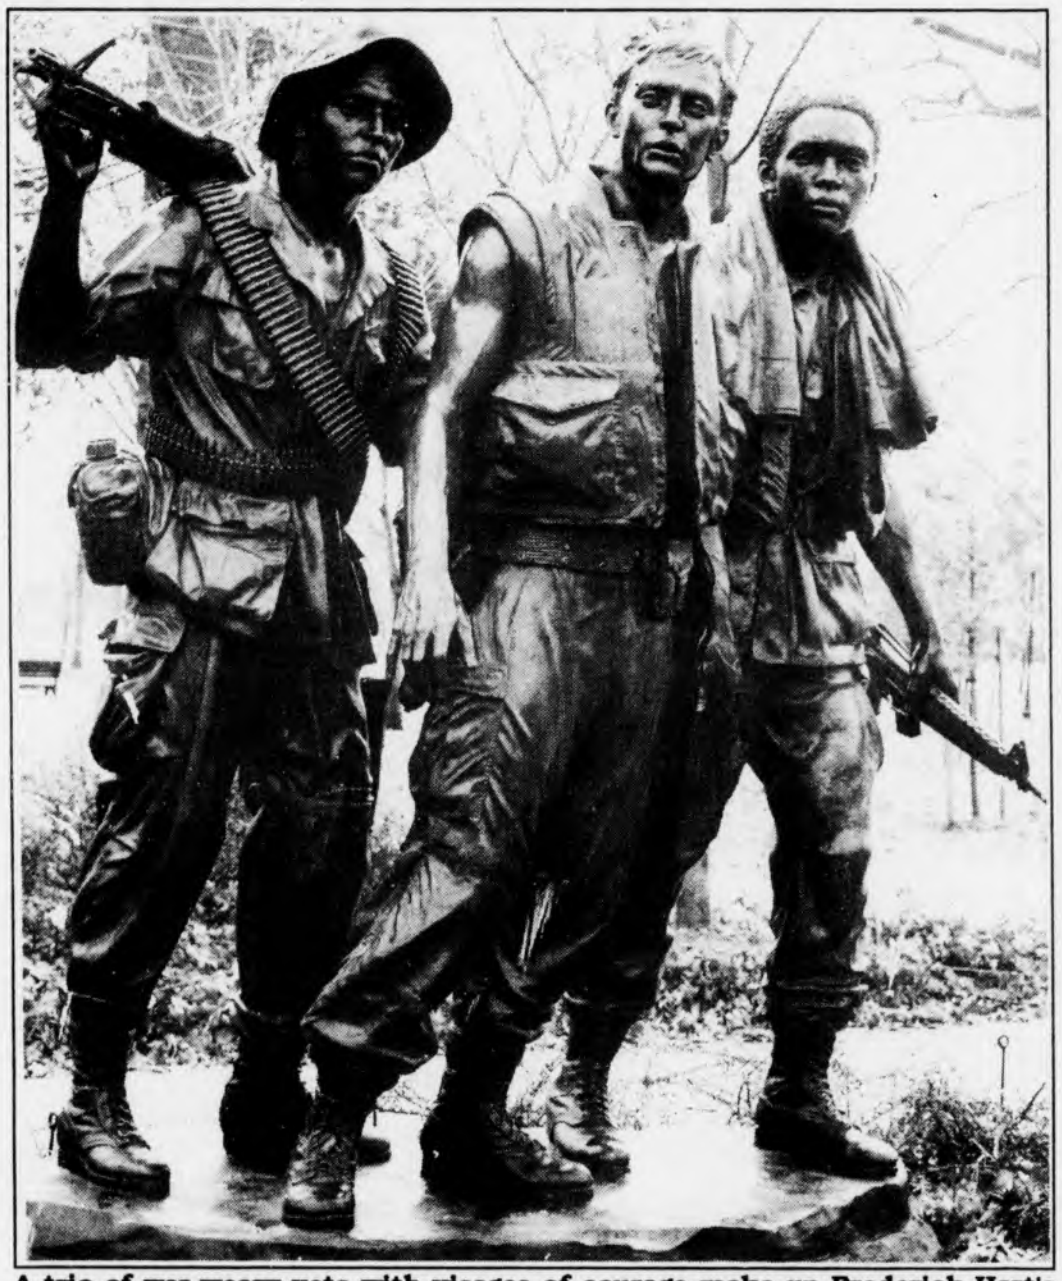
What was the source of such militant opinion? In an era when the majority of media toe the Politically Correct (read, liberal) Line, how did this administration convince the majority of people to support a conflict thousands of miles away?

Of course there was the subtle propaganda of news management that all administrations practice. Saddam Hussein was carefully portrayed as the new Hitler, an analogy that is more revealing in its missing the mark than striking it.

Clearly, Hussein would be a Hitler, a tyrant he admires, if he only could. Yet Iraq is not Germany. Calling Hussein Hitler, served the administration's purposes in a variety of ways. First, everyone recognized the evil of the Nazis. Second, it raised the notion of a just war, as most Americans view World War II. Third, it drew the parallel of naked agression by the powerful against the weak. Fourth, it made the case against the appeasement of tyranny.

These reasons justified the use of an overblown analogy from the perspective of an administration that saw the importance of stopping Hussein from controlling the world's largest oil reserves.

Despite the breast beating of the left and the off-putting denials of the right, oil was one of the major reasons for the Gulf War. The operative phrase here is, "one of..." Oil was not the only reason. Others were, protecting the national integrity of a country perceived as a friend; checking the agressive drives of a megalomaniac; sending a message to the rest of the world, especially Eastern Europe, that America will stand firm when its vital interests are threatened.



A concommitant benefit of the war was the kicking of the Vietnam hangover, that has so long clouded America's ability to use the full range of its political clout (this means the war option and the threat of same), in the world arena.

With all the efforts at opinion shaping contrived in the State Department and in the National Security Council, chance and fortuitous circumstance may have been more effective.

After many years of arduous labor, Ken Burns completed his monumental documentary, "The Civil War." The fact that this superb series was shown at the height of the American troop build up in Saudi Arabia was of major significance. For the first time, since the forgotten lessons of school, Americans by the legion, studied a brutal yet noble chapter of our history...together.

Night after night, to the haunting strains of the background theme, Americans saw and heard their ancestors acting parts in an historic tableau that was greater than any individual life.

The kindly voice of southern novelist turned historian, Shelby Foote, marvelled at the courage of both sides. Americans learned that that this war was also fought for not just one reason. It was a war for the Union, against slavery and for the fulfillment of the ideals born in America's Revolution...another just war.

A trio of war-weary vets with visages of courage make up Frederick Hart's bronze, The Three Servicemen at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial.

In the softening light, that comes with historical perspective, both Blue and Grey fought valliantly. Oftentimes we saw men going to battle knowing the hoplessness of their situation beforehand. Yet they held fast for their ideals and their comrades. We also saw and heard of the bravery and ecouragement on the homefronts. Whether the voiceover was speaking the sonorous words of a Walt Whitman, or the rebel sensibilities of an Alabaman infantryman, America heard the noble echoes of its common past.

Surely Ken Burns' documentary was not intended as propaganda. But time and circumstance, coincidence if you will, conspired to make it a most effective call to America. It bespoke a time of conviction, will, honor and sacrifice. No Pentagon flak or State Department flannel-mouth, could have achieved a more dynamic or startling affect.

There is a lesson here that revolves around twin pivots...truth and democracy. Somewhere this lesson has been misplaced. Simply stated without the elegance of Jefferson's style, the lesson is that truth in a democracy is the greatest motivator. The populace, armed with the truth, can and will make the courageous choice.

The Civil War documentary sparked a dormant flame. It recalled a sense of purpose and pride of action that was reborn in Operation Desert Storm.

Such are the whims of Clio, muse of history...sometimes art serves life, as life copies art.

Merchant Marines part of war effort

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

Jim Staples of Norwell is used to traveling to exotic places.

His career as a merchant marine takes him across the oceans of the world to countries like Japan, Taiwan, and Singapore.

But a trip to the port of Damman off Dhahran in the Persian Gulf during wartime was a first for the 1973 Norwell High graduate.

The 600-foot diesel powered freighter, the M.V. Green Lake, on which Staples is chief mate, is built to haul cars.

"It's a pure car carrier used in the commercial service trade to haul Toyotas," notes Jim, who graduated from the Massachusetts Maritime Academy in 1979.

"It's a roll-on, roll-off type vessel with a crew of 20," he adds.

American owned, the M.V. Green Lake is chartered by the Japanese government for use in the Toyota trade. In fact during peace time, huge block letters spelling out the word Toyota are brightly painted on the sides of the ship.

But as part of Japan's contribution to the war effort, the M.V. Green Lake, was loaned back to the United States and was one of the first ships of its type used in Operation Desert Storm.

"Japan footed the bill," says Jim about the cost of hiring the M.V. Green Lake for military purposes.

However, Japan was adamant that the ship keep a low profile. The Japanese government insisted that the ship carry no weapons. Even the name Toyota on the ship's sides was painted over.

The M.V. Green Lake carried about 600 military units such as hospital units, jeeps, personnel carriers, and ambulances on each of its two voyages from the United States to the Persian Gulf.

Staples joined the ship for its second trip.

Normally, the ship can hold 5,000 Toyotas.

"We have 13 decks and only three were used for military vehicles," he says.

Jim explained that some of the decks weren't strong enough to support the weight of the military transport vehicles.

The Japanese were furious when they discovered the M.V. Green Lake had some hawk missile launchers on board.

"We had to explain that it (Hawks) was only a piece of machinery and not the actual missile," he recalls.

Jim was on vacation at his home in Norwell last fall when he was called back to work.

He says that no merchant marines were required to go on the Gulf trips.

"It was entirely on a volunteer basis."

After goodbyes to his wife, Ann, and their 15-month-

Subject: Well Done

With the cease fire in effect, I look back on your performance during the past seven months with pride and gratitude.

Whether delivering vehicles, ammo, food and fuel, or operating directly with the U.S. Navy battle groups, or serving alongside U.S. Marine amphibious task forces in the Persian Gulf, the men and women of the merchant marine have acquitted themselves with excellence.

As you all know, even though the battle is over, the momentous task of returning the tools of war home remains. Our task stretches out ahead of us during the ensuing months, and I know that I can rely on you to continue your fine service.

Once again, the U.S. Merchant Marine has demonstrated its inseparable partnership with our armed forces and renewed its role as the nation's fourth arm of defense. I am proud to serve on the same team.

old son, Colin, Jim headed to Jacksonville, Florida.

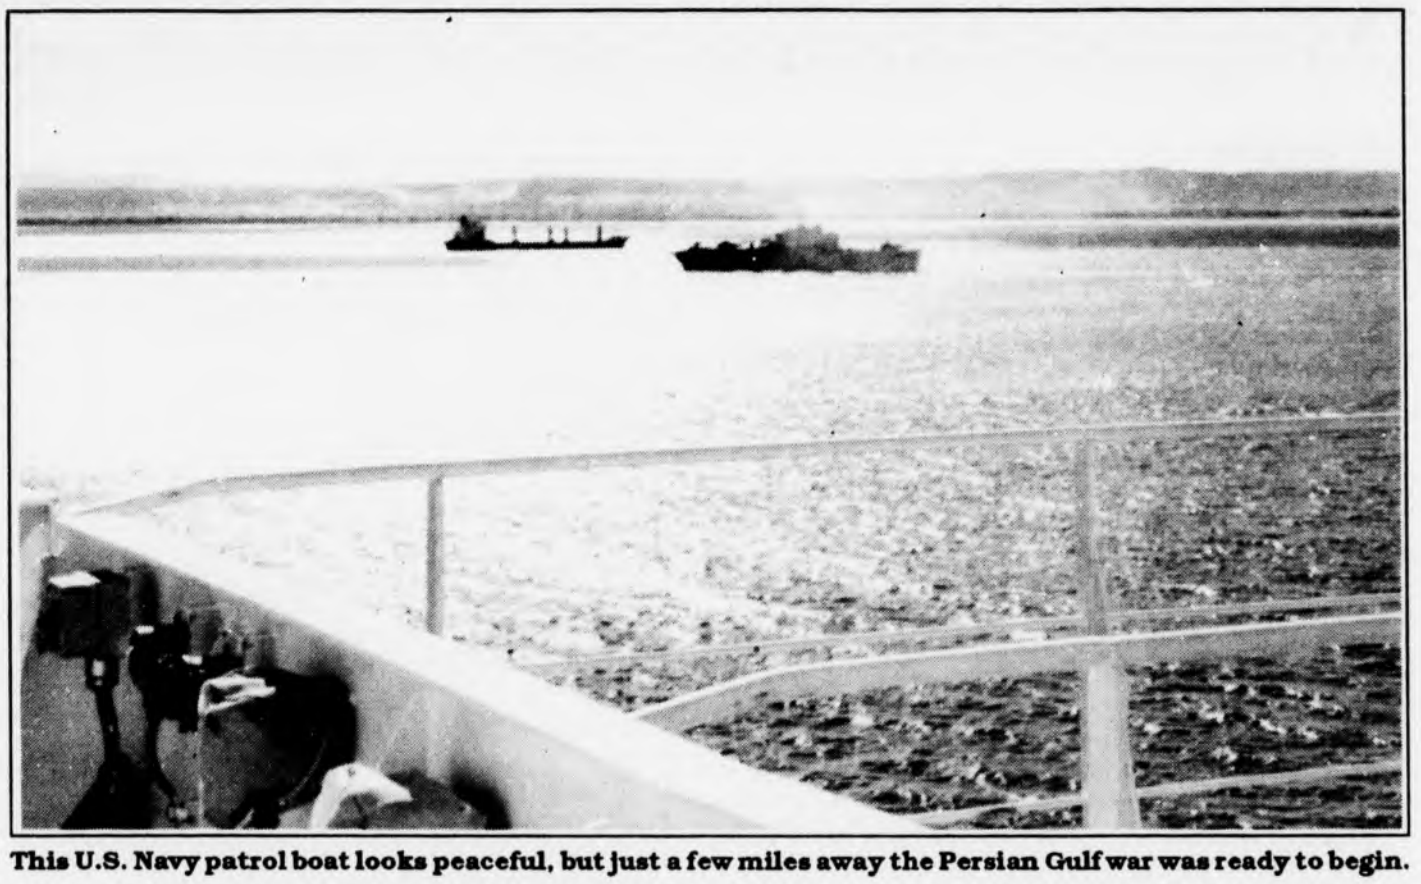
Then the ship sailed literally half way around the world — across the Atlantic Ocean; through the Straights of Gibraltar; the Mediterranean Sea; the Suez Canal; the Red Sea; Gulf of Aden; Gulf of Oman, and the Strs. of Hermuz; and then into the Persian Gulf — arriving Dec. 27.

And in just 12 hours after docking, the cargo was discharged.



Then after a few days in port, the M.V. Green Lake set out to Singapore to await orders. The orders came and the ship was sent to Italy to "load out the rest of the 82nd Airborne," Jim recalls.

Then it was back to Dhahran.

The date was February 10. The air war was in full swing and the ground war was less than two weeks away.

While in port, the crew (who were not allowed to disembark) noted increased military air traffic "flying real low, real close," Jim remembers.

A common sight overhead were the U.S. Blackhawk helicopters that swept the Gulf for mines.

This U.S. Navy patrol boat looks peaceful, but just a few miles away the Persian Gulf war was ready to begin.

Jim Staples aboard the M.V. Green Lake. A Blackhawk helicopter passes overhead.

Although the mine sweeping efforts of the military were successful, the M.V. Green Lake took no chances. One crew member rode shotgun — in the ship's bow — armed to shoot any floating mines and explode them, before the M.V. Green Lake got too close.

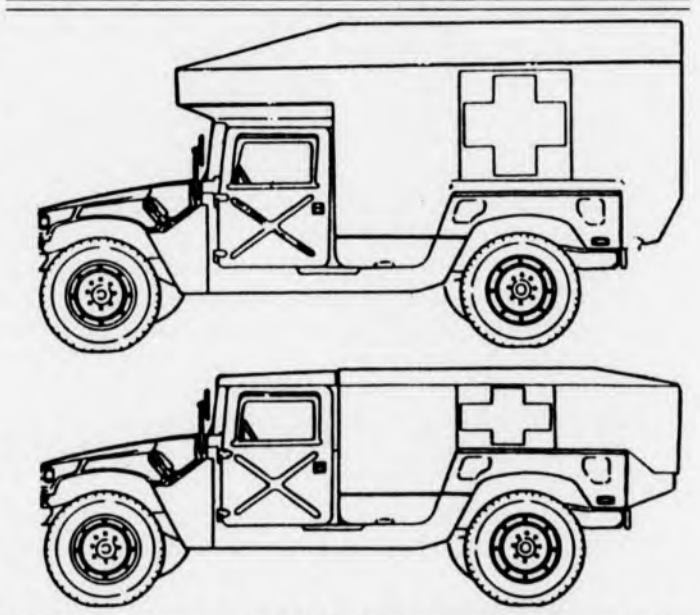
Donning gas masks and chemical gear for the crew became almost routine, Jim says.

"We'd shut all the ventilation down in the ship" as one part of a missile alert, he says.

A decontamination room was also set up on board.

After a few days, the M.V. Green Lake left port and "just drifted" in the Gulf of Oman.

"The embassy had not made a decision about what to do with the ship," Jim explains.



Floating in the Gulf of Oman off the southern tip of Iran was hectic, Jim recalls.

"Navy jets kept flying overhead asking who we were and where we were bound for."

Finally, the M.V. Green Lake returned to Japan where it is back in the Toyota trade.

Jim flew home to Norwell where he finished up that vacation and spent some time with his son, Colin, now nearly 2 years old.

"It feels real good to be home," he says.

It was this type of vehicle that the M.V. Green Lake hauled to the troops in the gulf. Because the freighter is leased by Japan and was loaned back to the United States as part of Japah's contribution to the war effort. The M.V. Green Lake was not allowed to carry weapons of any kind.

Adversity unites local families

By Mike Hardman
Mariner staff

All they had in common was their loved ones serving in the Army National Guard's 181st Unit out of Whitman. When the unit shipped out, these families who didn't know one another, started on their way to becoming close friends.

While the 181st Engineering Company was being sent to the Persian Gulf, the families joined to form the Friends of the 181st.

When the war broke out January 16, members of this support group helped each other through the tough times. They held dinners , marched in parades, including one on Feb. 24, while the 181st was clearing the way into Kuwait.

On St. Patrick's Day a corn beef dinner raised money for those who were financially strapped because of the war. A night of boxing was held at the armory to raise money.

While the unit was working 12 to 14 hour days in the hot sun of the desert, the support group was getting much accomplished at home.

"It was a lot of hard work," said Friends Organizer Bill Norcott. "Everybody wanted to contribute and they worked hard. It's been great working with the families."

One of the most recent fundraisers was a successful Las Vegas Night. A parade is planned for September.

In the meantime, the families are planning to get to know each other again.

"I'm sure there will be a lot of parties," said Norcott. "They were only gone six months, but it seemed like much longer."

In that time of stress amd loneliness, a lot of friendships were made by people who needed friends.

Memories of Vietnam: so we never forget

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

Master Sgt. Ray Bows

"Vietnam vets aren't looking for a parade or sympathy," says Master Sgt. Ray A. Bows, U.S. Army retired.

"We are only looking to see that people don't forget – and that Vietnam never happens again."

And in his own way Bows, who served in Vietnam in 1968-69, got a chance to remind the thousands of Americans – who attended the annual Memorial Day celebration at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, D.C. – exactly that.

Bows, the author of two books U.S. & Allied Military Tokens of Vietnam 1962-73, and Vietnam, Military Lore 1959-1973...Another Way to Remember, was asked to be one of the speakers at the ceremony this year.

A professional numismatist (coin-medal collector), Bows is an advisor to the archivist for the Museum and Archeological Regional Storage Facility (MARS) which houses the thousands of items left by visitors to the Vietnam Veterans Memorial.

An Abington native, Bows – who owns Bows and Sons Precious Metals in the Merchant's Row Mall on Route 53 in Hanover – works with Druery Felton Jr., who is curator for the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Collection at MARS.

KNOWS ABOUT THE NAMES

"My claim to fame is that I know more about the names on the memorial from the historical view than anyone else around," notes Bows.

Through his business, Bows has collected insignia, medals, and MPCs (military currency and coins) from the Vietnam era. Often names of soldiers appear on the military tokens as a regiment's way of honoring a fallen comrade. Bows has researched the stories behind many of the soldiers' names in his book, Vietnam Military Lore.

His books are an excellent reference source for memorabilia from the war.

So when Druery of MARS finds something left at the memorial that he cannot identify, he writes to Bows for help.

Sometimes the inquiry concerns a Vietnamese military insignia or decoration, or an American specials forces elite "recon" (reconnaissance) team patch.

"Druery draws on my knowledge," notes Bows.

Bows explains that items left at the wall run the gamut from poems, school photographs, and drivers' licenses – to military jackets and hats.

The only items that are not saved are: dried or fresh flowers; unaltered American flags (which are donated to the Boy Scouts); and cremated remains.

If the flag has been altered (for example, some people write letters or poems on the white stripes), it is saved, he explains.

Recently Bows helped identify a patch from the 1st of the 11th Recon team – and another patch, with only Potsville written on it, which turned out to be Scoutmaster's patch and not a military one at all, he recalls.

'FIND THEIR BUDDIES'

Bows says that people go to the Vietnam Memorial to "pay tribute to the 58,175 names on the wall and to find their buddies."

He explains that the ceremony on Memorial Day starts at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial and then moves over to the reflecting pool by the Washington Monument.

Many of the veterans, who visit the memorial are also veterans of World War II and Korea, Bows adds.

"Most of those people on Panel 1-E (of the memorial) who served from 1957 to the latter part of 1965 were professional soldiers," he explains. "Few were drafted and most had served in Korea and World War II."

Bows says that Vietnam veterans are proud of the way the country handled Operation Desert Storm.

"I have respect for President Bush and most Vietnam vets do," he says. "But most of us were a little upset to outraged when Bush said – the stigma of Vietnam is buried forever in the sands of the Middle East."

For many Vietnam vets, that war is still very real.

"Some fellows are still having problems because of what happened 20 years ago.

"The feelings of Vietnam – like having a buddy die in your arms will never go away – it will be with them until the day they die."

Bows says Vietnam is not "a piece of history" to those who fought.

He talks about two Vietnam vets, he knows – one who died recently from complications related to exposure to Agent Orange, a defoliant used in Vietnam – and another who recently committed suicide.

NOT A CONVENTIONAL WAR

Bows explains that in Vietnam, we were not fighting a conventional war. He notes that in Iraq – even with all the technology – the war was conventional.

"In Vietnam, we were there to pacify villages, not to take ground and hold it.

"In Operation Desert Storm, we went over there to win and not to set up housekeeping."

And Bows adds that Vietnam vets take pride in the fact that the Vietnam War may have contributed positively to the war in the Persian Gulf.

"What those young people did there – they did a fine job," he notes.

A Vietnam veteran stands at the Vietnam Memorial in Washington, D.C.

But Bows adds proudly that he feels the Vietnam vets' "strong sense of right and wrong and the Vietnam experience helped rally America behind the Desert Storm troops."

Vietnam veterans see vast differences in two wars

By Matthew Whorf
Special to the Mariner

Much as the Persian Gulf War renewed unsettling, often painful, memories for Vietnam veterans, the war's aftermath has similar effects on those who served in Vietnam twenty years ago.

The plight of Vietnam veterans - the lack of public support while they served and the less-than-heart-felt-reception when they returned home - had, of course, long been a controversial issue before the Gulf crisis and subsequent war began.

Many Vietnam veterans have tended to draw comparisons between their experiences and those of the Gulf War veterans on practically every level.

The most obvious and striking contrast has been that of public support, which has been overwhelmingly favorable for the Desert Storm troops while, in its time, almost nonexistent for those who served in Vietnam.

But other contrasts have been made as well, notably the strategic tactics of the military campaigns of the respective wars and their overall intent and sense of purpose, all of which differed to extreme proportions. At the same time, similarities have also been noted, such as the nature of the enemy and the conflict itself.

These are among the subjects discussed by three Vietnam veterans, who offered their thoughts and comments on the Persian Gulf War and its aftermath. While all of the veterans agreed on many points, their comments also revealed individual perspectives.

"I want to make it clear, first off, that I don't speak for all Vietnam veterans," said Joe Rancourt, a Hingham business consultant who served in the First Marine Division in Da Nang in 1967. "But while the Persian Gulf War was in progress, my personal belief was and still is that war is immoral, period. I think that mankind in general, and the U.S. especially, should be highly-evolved enough to have learned this by now."

Rancourt continued, "In general, I see this military campaign, before, during and after the war, as a sort of World War II mentality having its last hurrah. Or to put this another way, I support our troops in the Gulf, and all over the world, but not the war effort. As a Vietnam veteran, another thing I strongly object to is what I call the 'cutesifying' of the Desert Storm operation, with the way one sees all of the yellow ribbons and the flags on cars, homes, etc. Suddenly, it seems, everyone is very patriotic, but what I would like people to understand is that there was and is nothing cute about this thing. This was a war, and we were killing human beings, including those from friendly fire. Often I think support for our troops is misread as support for the war, which it is not."

"The reason we lost in Vietnam was because of cultural, not economic, differences. In the Vietnamese Buddhist culture, much like in the Arab culture, the belief is that one is here for 10,000 lifetimes and can fight over 1,000 years and two, three, five or however many lifetimes for an ultimate cause, whereas Americans believe that everything they need to do should be done in one lifetime. The Arabs believed that the war with the U.S. was a holy war, and they believed in a marketplace of haggling, not a stern ultimatum like the kind (President) Bush was putting down. This is why my greatest fear when this war began was that this was Vietnam all over again, because we, as a country, were not taking the Arab culture into account."

"As far as the troops are concerned, I feel wonderful about them coming home. And when this country holds its celebrations for them, my feeling is that it's their day, and I don't want to detract from that by opening any old wounds concerning Vietnam or otherwise. In general, I hope the country gives them outstanding amounts of recognition and showers them with benefits. The troops really deserve it, because they bravely went over and served and did their job. And they did not 'Quayle,' which is a new word some of us Vietnam veterans have, meaning 'to cower in fear.'"

Weymouth resident Paul O'Connell, Quincy Fire Department chief, served in the First Marine Division in Da Nang from October, 1968 to September, 1969. He is one of many Vietnam veterans who has in recent years returned to Vietnam for personal reasons relating to war experiences. He made thee trip in June of last year.

Said O'Connell, "When I went to Vietnam, I was 18-years-old and typically my points of view were of a kid. I didn't know why I was there, as far as the politics were concerned and all. In one year, I experienced the killing, dying and devastation, but I was patriotic at the time so I came home feeling pretty good about it."

O'Connell continued, "There were a lot of differences between the Vietnam War and the Gulf War in how they were fought. In the Gulf War, the troops were not able to come home until it was over. Unlike Vietnam, the military didn't want to use the replacement system this time. Also in this war, whole units were called up to serve, not just one person from one neighborhood."

"As far as the Gulf War has been concerned, for Vietnam vets, the reminders are there. What I'm experiencing is that I'm realizing that Vietnam was just what it was. It was a mistake and I have to begin to drop my resentments. The homecoming will be different this time, and I figure that I can either continue to be resentful or be part of it. In a way, we were trying to win two wars, the one in the Persian Gulf and the one in the aftermath of Vietnam."

"Being a Vietnam vet, everything I see I want to compare. When I came home, there was nothing to celebrate, basically. But as far as the Gulf War-veterans are concerned, I think they did a great job and they should be celebrated for their victory and their return home, but not just because we didn't do it for the Vietnam vets."

Matthew Marr is a Cohasset firefighter who served in the Army's First Infantry Division, known as "The Big Red One," in the Tay Ninh province, also known as "The Iron Triangle," in '68 and '69.

Said Marr, "The government uses the press to its advantage, which is one thing we learned from the Vietnam war. During that war, the government was giving us daily updates on body counts, which were not necessarily true."

Marr continued, "As far as I'm concerned though, I love the United States and I'm proud to be a veteran and an American. The Vietnam vets were shunned after the war, and it's good the way the country has learned about that. I hope these kids coming home will be treated with dignity, but beyond that I think we should forget the past and move on."

"We didn't fight the Vietnam War right. It was fought by politicians and not by soldiers. This time the soldiers fought and they won, and everyone loves to be associated with a winner, therefore, the Gulf War veterans are not going to be stigmatized. I think Vietnam veterans should get involved in organizing celebrations for the Gulf War veterans."

A Persian Gulf album

By Patsy Murray
Mariner Staff

When they decided a year ago to earn their "Honor Our Armed Forces and Veterans" Badge, the Junior Girl Scouts of Troop 4347 out of Pingree School in East Weymouth looked around for a small ship they could adopt. After talking to the public affairs officer at the Newport Naval Base, they decided to "adopt" the crew of the guided missile fast frigate Samuel B. Roberts.

Of course, the girls had no way of knowing that a few months later "their ship" would be deployed to the Persian Gulf in support of U.S. naval operations in the effort to drive Iraq out of Kuwait. The girls, students at the Lawrence W. Pingree Elementary School in East Weymouth, decided to do everything they could to keep up morale on the Sammy B. They wrote to pen pals aboard ship, cooked, packaged and mailed scads and scads of goodies, wrote cards and wrapped gifts.

Their devotion was so appreciated that when the Roberts sailed back into Newport Harbor March 28 the Weymouth Scouts received a personal invitation to greet the crew dockside. And there they were when the ship loomed through the fog with its American flag — the size of a football field — growing larger and larger as it neared the pier. Discovering a Midwestern sailor whose family could not make the trip East for the homecoming, the girls lined up give him welcoming hugs.

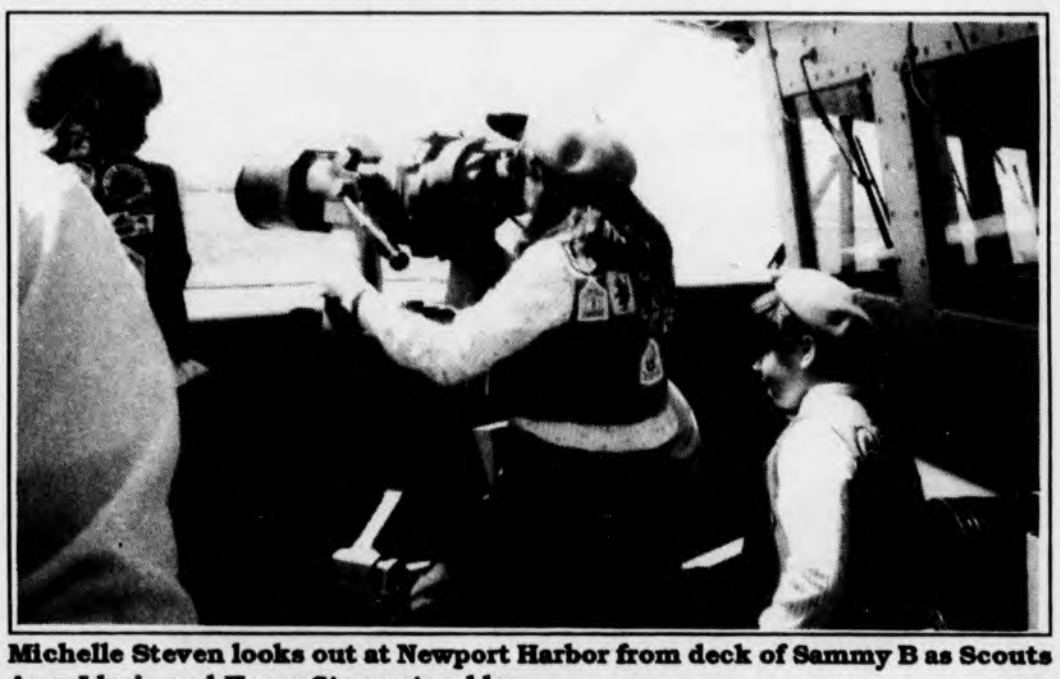
Before the day was over, the Weymouth girls had received a personal invitation from the captain of the Roberts to return for a private tour of the ship and to receive their "Honor Our Armed Forces and Veterans" badges. That happy day occurred on June 9. Parents, brothers and sisters were invited to come along. Troop 4347 presented plaques to the Sammy B and each girl received her badge directly from the hand of Lt. Cmdr. Roland J. Mulligan, the ship's executive officer.

Their ship was home. And she was theirs alone for the day.

Members of Troop 4347 are Kara Bernhard, Valerie Bruneau, Nicole Conant, Kristen Cooper, Meghan Cronin, Tracey Deree, Meaghan Dowling, Sarah Fuqua, Yvonne Howard, Amy Idaris, Terry Keenan, Jennifer Kelliher, Holly Langmeyer, Kara LaRocco, Nichole Levesque, Lynne McMorrow, Debbie Milliken, Andrea Mirik, Lauren Rice, Lachele Ryan, Michelle Steven, Kerry Stone and Emily Sullivan. Their leaders are Anne Stone and Fran Langmeyer.

For all of them, Memorial Day, Veterans Day and American veterans have taken on a new meaning — thanks to the Sammy B.

At March 28 homecoming, Kara Bernhard hugs Midwest sailor whose family was unable to greet him when the Sammy B returned to Newport from the Persian Gulf.



Holly Langmeyer and Kerry Stone present plaques to Troop 4347"s special ship.

Members of Troop 4347 make their feelings known as they wait on dock for the Sammy B to hove into port from the Persian Gulf on March 28.

Lt. Cmdr. Ronald J. Mulligan shakes hands with Tracey Deree as he presents her "Honor our Armed Forces and Veterans" Badge during June 9 shipboard ceremonies.

Michelle Steven looks out at Newport Harbor from deck of Sammy B as Scouts Amy Idaris and Kerry Stone stand by.

Holly Langmeyer's pen pal "Rick" leads a tour of the Sammy B.

Members of Troop 4347 wait on dock with "Yellow Ribbon Tree" from Desert Shield wives group for "their ship" to come in.

Braintree pilot acts as decoy to avenge friend's death

By Sean Lyons

It was 1976. Throughout the country, parades, fireworks, and parties commemorated the 200th anniversary of the declaration of freedom by our forefathers.

Thomas Walsh graduated from BHS in 1976.

Navy Son— Lt. Thomas Walsh in his Navy dress uniform

In 1991, he fought for that freedom as a Navy fighter pilot during the gulf war.

"He had a job to do and he did it," said Beverley Walsh, Thomas' mother.

"We're all very proud of him, and glad he's okay."

Walsh was en route to the Mediterranean Sea on the USS Saratoga last August when Saddam Hussein began his aggression against Kuwait.

"It was going to be a honeymoon cruise," said Paul Walsh, the airman's father, a former Navy man himself, who was stationed at the old Squantum Naval Air Base in Quincy for two years.

"It was a routine mission. They were going to do some training, some drills, and see some sights," he said.

But they did not drill or train, and instead prepared for the real thing—war. Walsh's ship headed for the Red Sea, where its first objective was to protect a vulnerable Army setting up its positions. Then the bombings of Baghdad started, and Walsh began flying air strikes on key Iraqi military sites.

A year after graduating from BHS, Walsh headed west to attend Arizona State University, where he received a degree in mechanical engineering. It was during his days in Arizona that Walsh decided he wanted to fly planes.

"He was always into motorcycles and fast things," said his father.

"But the funny thing about it, he never had any desire to fly. He never even mentioned it. Then one day while he was in Arizona, he called and told me and my wife that he was going to take flying lessons."

Those flying lessons turned out to be a doorway to an illustrious eight-year navy career. Walsh joined the navy straight out of college, and in 1986 received his gold wings. He has logged in over 2000 hours in Navy aircraft, and has 200 carrier landings.

Walsh was commended three times for his skill as a pilot during Operation Desert Storm, twice receiving the Distinguished Flying Cross.

"For heroism while participating in aerial flights" read the commendation.

"Undaunted by the harrowing salvos, he courageously pressed forth...Walsh led a section of stand—off missile launch aircraft through hundreds of miles of heavily defended enemy airspace for a night attack on a critical airfield in central Iraq."

"Spike"— Lt. Walsh's friend, Scott Speicher, who was shot down and killed in the Gulf. Walsh received a commendation for acting as a decoy to blow up the missile site that shot his friend down.

The third award was one he probably wished he never had to receive.

"Tom's good friend, a pilot in another division but on the same ship, was shot down and killed by an Iraqi missile. He was one of the first ones. I remember watching CNN, and hearing that an F-18 from the USS Saratoga had been shot down. I was worried it was Tom," said Paul Walsh.

"After a day or so, they identified the pilot as Scott Speicher. I was relieved, but felt very badly for that kid's family."

Tom's aircraft and three other planes then went on a mission to locate the missile site that had downed Speicher. Acting as a decoy, Tom let the Iraqi radar catch his plane. While the Iraqi's were busy homing in on him, the three other planes that had accompanied Walsh opened fire on the missile site, and blew it up.

Scott Speicher left behind a wife and two girls.

At the end of June, Tom will be turning his F-18 for a job as a commercial pilot. You can bet that he, along with his family, will be glad to be flying the friendly skies, instead of ones filled with enemy fire.

Holbrook's Holbrook sheds 27 pounds on diet in desert

By Sean Lyons
Forum Correspondent

Ed Holbrook of Holbrook recently lost 27 pounds.

He did not lose it by running up and down Franklin Street wrapped around in garbage bags.

He did not lose it by eating lots of fresh vegetables, fruits, and no meat.

He did not lose it by drinking those diet shakes Tommy Lasorda tries to sell us on TV.

Instead, his diet consisted of stale crackers and tuna fish, (hold the mayo in the desert sun, please). It was called "The Official U.S. Government's Gulf War Diet for Soldiers."

Sure to be a big hit with dieters everywhere.

Holbrook graduated from HHS in 1962. He went into the army straight out of high school, where he spent the next four years involved in air defense systems. After leaving the army, Holbrook looked around for jobs, but like now, there weren't a whole lot. So he went back to the military, and landed a job with the National Guard's 1058th, a transportation company out of Brockton. He's been there ever since, obtaining the rank of maintenance sergeant.

On August 18, his company was put on alert status, because of the situation in the gulf.

"We had to let the Army know everywhere we went, and a telephone number where we could be reached in case we got called up.

"Then on September 20, my company got activated."

Three days later they were on their way to Fort Devens, for re—training, including some lessons on chemical warfare. They spent 50 days there, and on November 10, Ed Holbrook landed in Saudi Arabia.

"I'll never forget that day," said Holbrook.

"The temperature was 115 degrees."

His company lived in large metal warehouses in the middle of the Saudi desert for the next month or so. They bathed in outdoor showers and went to outdoor latrines.

"It reminded me of a migrant workers' compound," said Holbrook.

While using outdoor facilities, Holbrook's company prepared trucks, jeeps and transported mail and ammunition.

On January 8 Holbrook and his company moved out to Riyadh and helped make final preparations for the ominous ground war. While there he watched the first Iraqi scud attacks fly over his head.

"The first one was scary, but after that it didn't bother too many of us. We just figured this was war and we accepted it."

They also had to accept some restraints in what they did or said in order not to offend the neighboring Muslims.

"There were some songs we had to be careful not to sing, and we had to watch how we celebrated our religious holidays like Christmas."

When the ground war began, Holbrook's unit headed for Nasiriyah in Iraq, and for the next five weeks there was no mail in or out.

Along the way to Nasiriyah, Holbrook saw his most memorable scenes of the gulf war, as well as his most gruesome.

"There was a lot of destruction and death. Lots of burnt Iraqi bodies along the roads. I traveled along that 'Valley of Death', as it was called, where all the Iraqis who were trying to get out of Kuwait got bombed by the air force."

Holbrook's company got attached to the 82nd Airborne during the ground war, where they trucked further into Saddam Hussein territory.

"We had him down and out, I can't understand why we didn't go after him," he said.

Holbrook says that the most difficult part of the war was leaving his family which includes a two-year old daughter.

"I think it's easier, although it's still hard, for families who have their spouses in the army rather than the National Guard. They expect being called up to war a little more than National Guard families," said Holbrook's wife, Lawana.

While Holbrook roved the desert in the middle of a war, children from several towns and cities in the South Shore took to their pens, pencils and even crayons and wrote to Holbrook.

Holbrook from Holbrook He's right up the street—Ed Holbrook (right) leans on a railing in front of a sign with a friend that shows how close his company was to Baghdad and Saddam Hussein.

These letters served as his main source of comfort in uncomfortable times.

"Although I didn't receive a great amount of support from my home town, only one girl wrote to me, I received much support from my nephew's school. He's a third grader at Brookfield school in Brockton."

The letters touched on a variety of topics, from hair pulling to camel spitting.

"I bet you are the best soldier there and the crew is doing good too. You are the best man I've seen on tape," wrote Stacie Shields.

Another student also complimented Holbrook on his looks:

"You look good for your age," she wrote.

A girl named Heather had an interesting question for Holbrook:

"Do camels spit at you?"

To that question Holbrook answers a resounding "yes."

Krystyn, who's handicapped and sits in a wheelchair, brought back a piece of real everyday family life for Holbrook when she wrote:

"My nephew likes to pull my hair."

Holbrook said; "picture yourself sitting in the desert with kids writing stuff like this to you. It help so much."

Nowadays, Holbrook says he's enjoying everyday life at his home on South Franklin Street.

"We're looking at getting a swimming pool or a car. Sort of a present for everyone because we all went through so much. Things are getting back to normal now."

An emotional rollercoaster for families back home

By Annette Shea Ruta
Mariner correspondent

Time. To the families of service people in the Persian Gulf, time can be a best friend and worst enemy.

"All this time building up and building up. The anticipation does a number on anybody," says Nancy Breed, mother of two young men serving in the Gulf.

This past week has been an emotional roller-coaster for service people's families, with peace talks begun and then proved futile, the deadline for a ground war passing on Saturday, and false news of an Iraqi surrender on Monday.

"In spite of this week's gleam of hope, I knew it was too good to be true," Nancy said.

Her youngest son is 20-year-old Steven Lounsbury, a member of the air department on the USS Theodore Roosevelt. He arrived in Saudi Arabia on January 15.

Her other son is Kevin Lounsbury, 25, who is a member of a team that runs a missile tank in the 24th infantry. He is married with two children and has been in the army for more than seven years.

Of the outbreak of the ground war, she said, "If it had to be, it had to be. Good. Now get it over with. Let it end quick and get them out of there."

Nancy said she was not at all surprised when she heard the ground war had started. But on January 16, when she heard that the air war had begun, "I rattled, I shook from head to toe."

A clerk in the Registrar's office at Town Hall, Nancy says she is grateful for the heavy work load resulting from the town's annual census. Even though she thinks about her sons all the time (their pictures are pinned above her desk), she said, "I'm glad I have the census work. We're working like crazy. It's kept my head going."

Through their letters, Nancy has discovered that her two sons are much closer than she, or maybe they, realized. "The closeness of those boys. I never realized how much they worry about each other," she said.

In speaking of her sons' mood, Nancy says they're very positive, but as time goes on they've become more and more anxious. Her mood reflects theirs.

But so far, she has not felt the need to attend one of the support groups sponsored in Randolph or elsewhere. She gets her support from the community at large, so different for the general mood during the Vietnam War.

'The closeness of those boys. I never realized how much they worry about each other.'

Nancy Breed

"I have to handle this in my own way, in my own time," she said.

"People are so kind. I cannot break down. You put up a big front. I just have to stay strong so I can be strong and healthy so I can put my arms around them and give them a great big hug when they come home."

But when Nancy heard of the towns-sponsored rally, she said, "Be sure I'll be there." Kevin's wife and sons also planned to attend, she said.

Jim and Joan Adams, whose son, James Adams Jr., 19, serves with the army signal corps in the Gulf, are members of the Randolph support group begun by Veteran's Agent James Hurley. They have been active in planning the rally.

For most families, communication with their sons and daughters in the Gulf is painfully slow. After the scud attack which killed American service people in Dharan, families of soldiers stationed there were glued to their televisions and radios, hoping for any scrap of information.

So two Randolph families had good reason to be grateful that they could communicate with their loved ones more quickly than the average.

One is the Adams family. James Jr. has been in the Gulf since September, and was stationed in the Dharan area, his grandfather, Dan Murphy, said.

The family was glued to the television set, hungry for news and anxious, Dan said. As a signal corpsman, James found a way to let his family know he was alright.

Irene Sumption has a daughter, Donna Sumption, 27, serving in the Gulf. Donna is a manager for Toys R Us in Portland, Maine, a job to which she was recently promoted. She is with a transportation supply unit, and was near Dharan.

Irene is one of the very few service families who can call their loved ones in the Gulf directly. She did just that when she got home from work on Monday and found out her daughter was fine.

Irene said her own spirits were high until the day of the attack. "I was doing good up until then. It just kind of hit me," she said.

Donna Sumption is a first lieutenant in the army national guard. She has been in Saudi Arabia since September 17. Donna's mother said her orders will keep her activated until the end of August. "I think the only thing that's holding her together is the hope that this will be over quickly," Irene said.

Irene said Donna, who grew up in Randolph, greatly appreciates her subscription to the Randolph Mariner (she receives it about one month late). And Donna also appreciates the efforts of Elder Affairs Director/Veteran's Agent James Hurley, who has been asking seniors to write to the troops.

"Every senior citizen has written to her," Irene said. "And she's answered every single one. She's a very special girl. She has a heart of gold."

(Denise Falbo also contributed to this report, which was written during the Persian Gulf conflict.)

Randolph students visited by their Persian Gulf hero

By Jean Dziergowski
Special to the Mariner

Eyes of innocence opened wide as Air Force Senior Airman Michael Johndrow walked into Jean Dziergowski's fourth grade classroom at the Martin Young School. A picture of Johndrow in uniform was perched on the shelf above Mrs. Dziergowski's desk; children in her classroom had corresponded with Johndrow while he was stationed in the Persian Gulf.

A native of Randolph, Johndrow is back home recovering from an eye injury sustained during combat. Despite his injury, Johndrow took time out to visit the children who had written to him during the many months away from home. Bedana Sabin's fourth graders joined in the visit, as did four students from the Boston School for the Deaf.

Clad in a bright blue Desert Storm Air Force jacket, Johndrow shared his experiences with the children who, not surprisingly, had many questions for him.

The kids were most interested in Johndrow's response to Mark Auflero's question, "Did you see any unusual insects or animals?"

Johndrow replied that servicemen were very wary of coconut crabs on the island of Diego Garcia. With claws big enough to crack coconuts, he asserted that these crabs could easily "take off a finger." Johndrow also explained that swimming in the ocean was promptly halted when he learned that the waters were infested with sharks.

When asked by Erica Tenenbaum, "Did you talk to your family?" Johndrow replied, "Yes, but it was very expensive. For half an hour on the phone it cost $100."

Jennifer Ramey wondered, "Did you get much sleep?"

"Not much," replied Johndrow. "I usually worked a 12-to-16-hour day. It fluctuated. I knew what time I was going to get up, but I never knew when I'd get off the job."

Wellwishers jammed into Hingham Square to welcome back the National Guard's 1058th.

"What would happen if you got caught sleeping when you were supposed to be on the job?" asked Michele Riley.

"I'd probably be behind bars," responded Johndrow. Children gasped. Clearly, the military is no place for kids who don't do their homework.

Always mindful of the latest fashion, Ilana Potischman queried, "How many uniforms did you take?"

"Four," Johndrow replied.

Welcome home, soldier.

Women participants earned wartime role of respect

By Nancy Bloom
Canton Journal staff

The war with Iraq was new and different in many ways.

For instance, bombs became "smart" - a part of fabulous high tech weaponry which wowed the world.

The world, at the same time, took in this war almost minute by minute. Telecommunications was a major, new piece of war in the Middle East, beaming live action into the living rooms of those with television sets.

This also was the first war in in which women were important participants and the dream that in America, all people are created equal became a little more real.

July Fourth is a celebration of that American dream - a fitting time to give Canton's women a chance to describe what the war meant to them.

A WOMAN SOLDIER

One size did not fit all for a young, Canton woman who stepped out of a public bus in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia and landed on the hem of her army-issued chador.

"It hurt me so much to know that I couldn't help except by giving moral support," she said.

"It ripped off my body," said this army reservist, grateful that her boyfriend was there to cover her up and not offend her Saudi hosts.

By the time the war raged in the desert, this young woman was stateside, transferred out because of her high security mission which is also the reason she must remain nameless.

But without a name, this young woman's war time experience contains a valuable lesson.

If the Army issued traditional dress for Arab women did not fit this petite soldier, neither does the stereotype of a young, American woman.

The daughter of Asian immigrants, this woman is above all, devoted to her family.

Yet it seems that devotion to her country must be a very close second for she dreamed serving America in the military from the time she was a little girl.

It is not surprising then, that she was deeply troubled to hear her fellow reservists balk at the thought of helping out as tensions with Iraq grew throughout the summer.

"They pay for our schooling and help us whenever they can," she said. "If you can't deal for them when they need you, then you shouldn't join in the first place."

By August, she was ready to go. Indeed, of the 82 people in her company, she was the first one to volunteer for she had made a commitment which she intended to keep.

"I'm glad I did it," said this true blue soldier. I'm glad I volunteered. I would never change my mind."

Her only regret was that she was sent back to America in November, long before the actual war began.

"It hurt me so much to know that I couldn't help except by giving moral support," she said.

"I had volunteered to go but I couldn't go," the soldier continued. "I couldn't even deal with my college's candle light vigils to support the troops. I'd just start crying."

Crying, of course, is what everyone expects from college co-eds and this college co-ed is no exception. Yet when it was time to put in her fair share of work in Riyadh, this young woman stood straight and tall.

"I'd get mad when people would say, 'sweetheart, don't try to lift that heavy box,' she explained.

Although the role of women is not this soldier's focus, she does believe that broadening people's view of women's military contribution has been a positive outcome of the war.

"But I don't think the military should lower their standards for females in combat situations," she warned."If women can equal men, that's fine."

"At least it puts a question in everybody's mind. I'd rather have them say 'maybe' than 'no.'

While the Fourth of July celebrates a brand new nation that to say 'maybe' the country can celebrate one of its truest daughters, a young American who never hesitated to ask 'maybe' when she examined her own potential.

A SISTER, A TEACHER, A PACIFIST

On the last day of school, Hansen School fourth grade teacher Ann Galvin asked her students to make three wishes.

"It was very moving," Galvin said. "At least one of their wishes was always something like world peace, curing all diseases, finding homes for the homeless."

"It's wonderful thing because the children have all caught on that life is precious and has to be respected," a woman for whom respect for life is the greatest of treasures.

One need not ask this woman what lessons the war contained for she is a teacher by nature. The lesson, so it seems, is an intrinsic part of her thoughts.

As the war raged on, she "grew" with the children. Together they learned the important of respect even as she worried for family and friends who were "over there."

"I explained to the children that respect begins from within," she said. "You take that respect with you everywhere you go and honor the people you meet with that respect."

For Galvin, Saddam Hussein's wanton disrespect for his fellows' lives made stopping him a necessary and patriotic duty.

However, respect for life is exactly why former Canton Journal assistant editor MaryLou Stocker believes that America should have allowed sanctions against Iraq to work.

"Off course, I don't care for Saddam Hussein," Stocker said. "But what about the civilians in Iraq?" We never hear about them. The casualties were so unbalanced."

"I am essentially a person who does not believe in war," continued Stocker, a clear and thoughtful woman. "We're all human beings. We've got to learn to live together without making war."

The war was not theoretical for Denise Thornton who's brother, Robert De Yeso Jr. , an Army captain,

"I explained to the children that respect begins from within . . . You take that respect with you everywhere you go and honor the people you meet with that respect."

was in Iraq during the war.

"To me personally, it meant that every single day my brother was over there I was very unhappy," Thornton said.

"All I thought about 24 hours a day is that he might be seriously injured or killed and what kind of effect that would have on his family and my family," Thornton continued. "I was absolutely obsessed with it."

Those who spoke with Thornton as tension with Iraq grew and war finally broke out knew that she was also actively supporting the conflict and the troops.

But she never forgot the innocent civilians and to this day, her heart seems to break all over again when she remembers the images of children and families broken by the war - children exactly like the students in Galvin's fourth grade class.

FOURTH OF JULY

America has certainly made an elaborate display of welcoming home the troops. Canton will be part of the celebration, showing that Canton Cares on July 4th.

For many VietNam War veterans, however, there will be joy mixed with bitterness as the celebration commences for their battle was without end and their homecoming was lonely at best.

"I don't blame the service people for doing what they're supposed to do," said Stocker, showing that America has learned to separate the soldiers from the politics that drive war and peace.

Denise Thornton is quick to remember the veterans of the Korean War too.

"This Fourth of July is a day to honor all veterans from all wars, especially the veterans of VietNam and Korea who seem to get lost," Thornton said. "It's a day to put aside personal feelings."

As always, there is a lesson from teacher Galvin.

"We're a young country and have made mistakes in our short few hundred years," said Galvin who believes that the treatment of the VietNam veterans is one of America's "most terrible errors."

"As long as we learn from that mistake it won't be totally in vain," she continued. "It's been wonderful to see how we've learned to support the troops."

THANK YOU.

Ed Holmes 'glad to be home' after Gulf duty

By Linda Veracka
Voice staff

After five months of serving in Operation Desert Storm and destroying mines in the Persian Gulf, Ed Holmes of Kingston says he's very glad to be home.

Holmes left for the Gulf in January. Unlike many of those called to duty in Operation Desert Storm who were reservists, Petty Officer First Class Holmes is a career Navy man with 14 years active duty. He returned to Kingston in June.

While in the Gulf he was stationed aboard the 190-foot mine sweeper, the U.S.S. Adroit.

He believes the United States did the right thing going to war. Although he was on Arabian soil only once, he has seen videos of the devastation wrought by Saddam Hussein, and agrees with President Bush's decision.

"Hussein has to be nuts. There is no rhyme or reason to any of his actions," Holmes said.

Most of the people he had fighting on the front line were untrained kids. He kept his well-trained troops back from the line," Holmes said.

His ship's responsibilities included locating mines, destroying them, and widening the travel lanes for the other ships.

Rather than actual "minesweeping", Holmes and his shipmates did more of a "hunting and destroy" activity.

"Low active sonar waves find the mines as well as mine-like objects," Holmes said. "Then we'd mark where the sonar detected anything and send divers down."

That gets tricky too, Holmes said. "There are very strong currents out there so there were only certain times the divers could go down. We called it 'dive windows.' That meant maybe only two hours twice a day at most," he said.

But once down, the divers investigate what the objects are. "Sometimes they just found coral, or a fishing contraption. But if they found a mine, they would put a delayed fuse on it. For safety we were supposed to be at least three-quarters of a mile away when they mine explodes."

At one point the Adroit was in front of the U.S.S. Princeton when the Princeton hit a mine.

"After that we had to clear a channel to get her back into port," he said, "and it took us nine hours to go 10 miles. But fortunately only one person was hurt seriously."

With a schedule of six hours on, six hours off, Holmes said it was easy to lose track of time. He has a watch, however, that gives the day and month in addition to time.

"That's the only way I knew what day it was," he said.

Neither he nor his shipmates had much time to worry about their families.

"We were either on or off," he said. "When we were on, the work required 100 percent concentration. But even when we didn't have time to worry, we always looked forward to mail call and getting letters from home. That was the best time of every week."

Being on a ship, Holmes and crew had to eat what they call "MREs" (meals ready to eat, or rations) only a couple of times. He did not experience as much culture shock as some of the land-based troops either.

"But every now and then, we'd hear the radio broadcasting their religious programs everywhere. They have one religion and they think everyone should participate in it," Holmes said.

He said the fires burning in the oil wells do not permit the sun to come through at all. Consequently they were very cold all the time. "And it seems as if you're always in the middle of night.

"Even out at sea, when the sandstorms hit the land, we experienced flying sand, too," Holmes said.

One area they had to check carefully was the ship itself to make sure it wasn't magnetic. "In essence we had to neutralize the ship because anything magnetic will attract the mines."

In the last few weeks after the cease-fire Holmes and his shipmates de-activated 55 mines and three bombs.

There's an expression that's used to describe the job of the minesweeper, according to Holmes. "Where the fleet goes, we've already been."

There are still mine sweepers in the Persian Gulf. Hussein has abided by his agreement and told them where the mines are. But the Navy still has to find them.

"Mines don't surrender," Holmes said.

A collective sigh of relief follows cease fire

By David McKee
Mariner staff

When the president announced a suspension of offensive movements in the Persian Gulf, there was an audible sigh of relief heard in Pembroke.

The subsequent cease-fire further eased the tensions of those most affected, the family members of the local servicemen in the Persian Gulf.

Pembroke has supported the soldiers fighting in the Gulf right from the start. Whether it was young school children writing letters and sending packages or a town-wide yellow ribbon ceremony, the concern was always there.

Now there was celebration and jubilation.

"I heard about it when the president went on TV and I still don't know whether to believe it or not," said an elated Cindy Long about the end of hostilities. Her son, Christopher, is a senior airman who had been stationed in the Gulf since November.

"I feel excellent now, but there is still the anticipation. I guess that's the mother in me," she said.

Christopher turned 22 while in the Persian Gulf and called his three-year-old son, Zachary Taylor Long, just last Monday.

"I was just sick while all the fighting was going on," Cindy Long said. "It got to the point where I couldn't even have a lucid thought. I was no good to anyone and did a lot of praying, especially when there was talk of the invasion. Now I'm feeling better, it's like the weight of the world is off my shoulders. But I won't be entirely well until he walks in the door. But that could be a while, with the cleanup and all that."

Long still had the family Christmas tree up and had Christopher's presents under the tree.

"His presents are saved and we're still waiting to have our Christmas with him," she said. "When he gets back, we'll have a big family gathering."

Louis Duchini, whose son, Daniel, is a lance corporal in the Marines and had been stationed in the Gulf since mid-December, was also relieved but skeptical.

"We're joyous," Duchini said. "But to be honest, there is still some paranoia. We're waiting for the other shoe to drop with Hussein. We're skeptical but that's become a habit with a child over there. I figured when the war ended, we'd be jumping for joy. But with Hussein, you never know if another SCUD missile will be launched."

Duchini said the war, especially watching the details unfold on television, took its toll.

"You try to put it out of your mind and carry on but it was hard on us," he said. "It is a terrible thing to go through but we are not the only ones. Every time you hear a report about a battle or a missile falling, you think it's your kid."

Daniel Duchini was a student at Suffolk when he was called to serve in the Marine Reserves.

He intends to go back to school when he finally finishes up in the Middle East.

"Suffolk gave Daniel a half-year scholarship for his service," Duchini's proud father said. "There were about six other students who also served and they will also be getting a scholarship. I think that is a nice thing to be doing."

Brenda Kearney, the mother of Army 2nd Lt. Paul Kearney, couldn't wait to hear from her son, who had been stationed in the Gulf since Christmas Day.

"I'm very happy that this appears to be over," she said. "But I will certainly be happier when I hear from him in person."

Paul kept in constant contact with his wife, Maureen, but still his parents worried during the heaviest battles.

"My husband and I were down in Florida recently and there was no CNN and he was going crazy," Brenda said. "We were worried especially because he was stationed just south of Iraq. But the war won't be over for us until we hear his voice."

The Kearneys intend to have a special celebration when Paul can return to Pembroke.

"He was married just last August and we intend to have a big celebration just like that," Brenda said.

Jeannette Bousquet, the mother of National Guard MP Robert Bousquet, heard the news about the war ending when the president spoke.

"I wanted to go out and let out a scream," she said. "I just wanted to express my happiness and joy over the fighting stopping."

Robert was in the Persian Gulf since early February.

"It was a very difficult time," Jeannette said. "Because he is an MP, I knew he wasn't in the action as much as other soldiers, but I was worried nonetheless. I was concerned for him, as well as the other troops from Pembroke and all the families who had servicemen over there."

She said she had trouble functioning when the war was going.

"I was waking up in the middle of the night worrying about him," Jeannette Bousquet said. "But I'm super glad it's all over and I feel like I want to just hug everyone."

Eleanor Mielke was concerned about her husband, National Guard Staff Sgt. Richard M. Mielke, all through the war, but she tried not to let it overwhelm her.

"I tried not to think about what was happening over there because I really didn't have any control," she said. "I have two small children and I tried to remain calm, but it was hard. Deep down, I knew Richard was well-trained and could handle himself and that helped out a lot."

When she heard about the end of the war, Eleanor became skeptical.

"I'm relieved that it looks to be over," she said, "but I really don't trust Hussein. He's pretty wacko and you never know what he's up to."

Suzanne Landry, the mother of National Guard Corp. Michael E. Landry, was extremely relieved that the fighting is over.

Michael had been stationed in the Gulf since Jan. 9.

"I am thrilled, absolutely thrilled," she said. " I can't tell you how happy we are."

There were some anxious moments for the Landry family during the war.

Suzanne received a letter from Michael in which he said he was stationed at Kohbar, the location where a SCUD missile hit and killed many American soldiers.

"We heard about the attack and we were just sick," she said. "We thought the SCUD had blown up his barracks or something. We were relieved when we found out he wasn't there but we were also ashamed (of our joy) because of all the other people being killed."

Suzanne said the war took its toll on the family.

"I have not been able to sleep too well and I don't think my husband has slept one night since the thing started," she said. "He was just beside himself. And my three older boys also took things hard, knowing that their younger brother was over fighting in the war."

Thanks.
To all members of our Armed Forces.

A sister rejoices her brother's homecoming

By Cindy McAuliffe
Special to the Mariner

On January 16, 1991 at 7:08 p.m. my life changed for the worst and would remain that way for four months. That was the day my family and I found out that Saddam Hussein had not heeded George Bush's warning and George Bush had carried out his threat and was beginning the "liberation of Kuwait". That was the day my brother went to war.

My older brother Keith is in the Army Reserves. He's in the 94th Military Police Company stationed out of Manchester, NH.

The day the Persian Gulf War started was the day my brother was shipped out to Saudi Arabia. I knew it was coming. Three days earlier I had gone to "family day" at Fort Devens in Ayer, MA. Family Day is when everyone who has someone going to war meets and sits around not knowing what to say, not really having anything to say, but not wanting to give up the last precious moments with loved ones. Especially knowing you might never see them again.

The uncertainty of having someone in a war zone thousands of miles away is a major stresser. I can never imagine what the families of people on the front lines, pilots and especially POW's went through, because just having my brother in a supposedly safe zone hundreds of miles away from the action was nerve-wracking enough. Every day, every night. Every minute. I could hold conversations with people and be thinking to myself "I hope Keith's alright, I hope he's safe."

On Monday, February 25, my world went black as a SCUD missile hit Al-Kobar, Saudi Arabia, the city where my brother was stationed. Radio reports had hundreds dead and maimed, CNN had film of people scurrying, flames flying and bodies being dragged from what was left of a two-story building that housed American troops. But noone knew who was in the tent.

We didn't find out who wasn't in the tent until President Bush had come on TV February 27 to tell the American people that at midnight all offensive measures against Iraq would cease. Knowing the war was probably going to end very soon was a great relief. Not knowing if my brother was alive was living hell. I figured that by Tuesday we would've heard, but watching a news conference that day I was to learn that only three families of the over twenty or thirty that had loved ones killed had heard anything from the government. So at this point, no news was good news. An hour after the president had made his speech the phone at my apartment rang. It was my mother, telling me Keith had called and was fine and dandy. He had apologized for not calling earlier but he had been too busy "pulling bodies", as he put it. Knowing he was alive was such a relief that I was mad as hell he hadn't called earlier. Typical, I guess.

The next month and a half life went on as usual. Keith had called and said he had no idea when he'd be coming home. The next call he said "I'll be home in November." November? Ugh. That's a long wait. Then it was mid-June, then finally we got the word that it would be May 22. Excited? Yeah, you could say that. Ecstatic? Yup. Unbelievable? It seemed so. Four months really isn't that long. But with uncertainty and fear added into it, four months becomes forever.

As the homecoming day approached, excitement grew. I took the day off from work. It wouldn't have mattered if my boss Nancy had said no, nobody was going stop me from going to Westover AFB to welcome home my hero. He was due to arrive Tuesday night between 6-10 p.m. That's quite a window, but now it was only four hours, not four months.

On Monday, February 25, my world went black as a SCUD missile hit Al-Kobar, Saudi Arabia, the city where my brother was stationed.

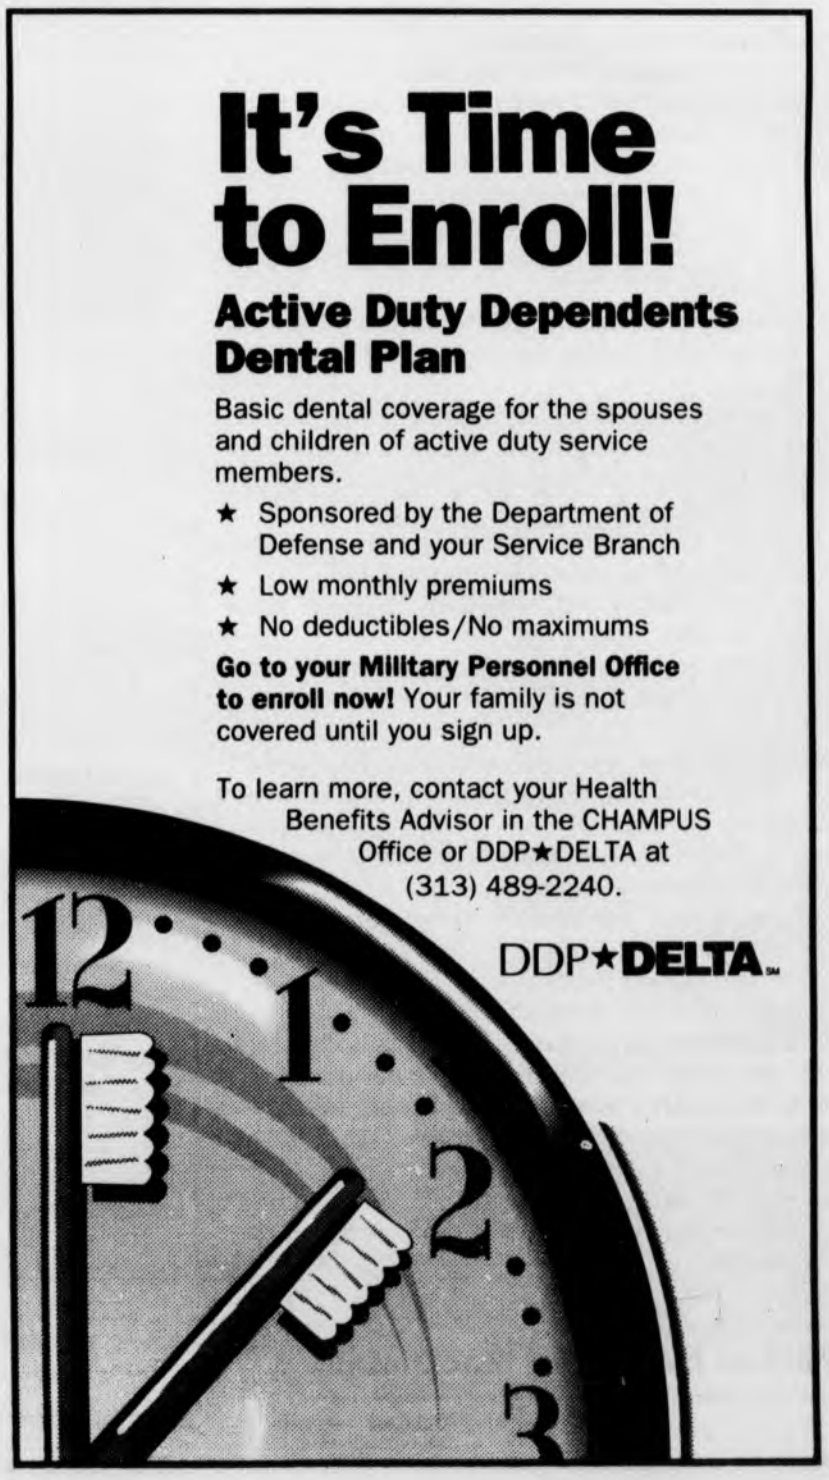
My parents and I got to the base at 7:30 p.m. A cargo plane was landing as we got there and we mistook it for Keith's plane. We got all excited, then got a letdown. But it was just a little letdown. Because we knew he'd soon be there, here, with us again. The more I thought about it, the more unbelievable it became. Keith's coming home, Keith's coming home, he'll be here any minute. I chanted this to myself over and over again. I was excited, but compared to my mother, I was cool as a cucumber. She was totally freaking out. I felt sorry for the person who got in her way when she set eyes on her eldest son. She was in a bulldozing mood, so look out. As we waited for Keith, other troops came and went. There was a red carpet set up for them because they are treated like royalty when they set foot on American soil. As it should be.

As we were saying goodbye with hugs and kisses and handshakes to another batallion that was off to their real homes (Westover was just a stopover for them) my brother's plane landed on the runway. People started screaming and clapping and got louder and louder as the minutes ticked by. Waiting for the plane to taxi to a stop was an exercise in patience. I just wanted to run out on the runway and stop the plane myself. The Boeing 747 taxied up to the hangar door where their families waited and the crowd got even louder. The noise was deafening. And the noise was beautiful.

There were other companies on the plane so they were getting off first, more waiting. Finally, finally, finally, our commentator of the hour on the PA system announced that the 94th MP Co. was the next people we would see get off the plane. My mother and father were on the edges of the red carpet, partitioned off with ropes that you weren't allowed to cross. The red carpet was for the troops only.



As the 94th came marching down the carpet, I stood taller and taller on my tippy toes. All of a sudden, my unique, handsome brother started looking like every soldier I saw walk in. I walked down to the door where they were entering the hangar looking at all the names on the uniforms. That's how I'd tell. (I never realized how many guys in the Army have short hair, tans, and wear glasses!) And there he was. Double-check, Cindy, are you sure?... Yes, I'm sure. "KEITH!" I screamed. He turned around and our eyes met and I was on that red carpet faster than you could spit. I don't think I have ever been so relieved and happy and thankful and hysterical in my entire life. We hugged long and hard. When I pulled away, I realized he was crying. I had never seen my older brother cry. This, of course, made me cry more. I could barely see. Then I heard him say "Where's mom? Where's mom and dad?" (I can never explain the sound I heard in his voice when he said that. The closest I can come would be the sound of a five year old lost in a mall for an entire afternoon upon finding a familiar face.) Crying, our arms around each other, I started walking up the way with him, thinking I knew where my parents were, but realizing I had no idea exactly where. When I finally spotted them, they were still looking towards the door for Keith. I called my mother's name and as she turned and saw Keith I knew I had seen bliss. I can't be sure, but I think she jumped the rope to get to us, which is no easy task, considering the rope came up to her waist and she had no running start. Then she started shaking and screaming and jumping up and down and just doing what I call now "The Gloria Dance". It was certainly a sight to see. After Keith got disentangled from my mother he reached out his hand to my father and my father started to reach out his hand and then a change came over him and he leaned over and grabbed Keith and hugged him so hard I thought he would break him.

Then one of the volunteers came along and asked us to get off the red carpet, so my parents and I obliged and Keith went on ahead to shake hands with the top brass. We were reunited again a few minutes later and my mother didn't let go of Keith's arm until he had to leave to go to Fort Devens. Who can blame her?

So Keith's home, I keep saying to myself. When this whole thing started I put two yellow ribbons on my car antenna. One for each brother. (My other brother Kevin is in the Air Force stationed in Germany. He was in Turkey during the war where American planes were flying out of one of the NATO bases.) Now that they are both relatively safe and out of the war zone, I took one ribbon off. I decided to leave the other one on until, hopefully, everyone comes home, and other families get the thrill of what my family was able to experience. The joyous feeling of homecoming.

1058th returns to civilian life

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

Last September, hundreds of teary-eyed Hingham residents lined Main Street to say goodbye to the Hingham-based 1058th Transportation Division.

On June 4, hundreds once again lined downtown Hingham; this time to welcome "the lost patrol" home.

The Massachusetts National Guard unit arrived at Fort Devens one week earlier and prepared for the return home.

The unit, the last Massachusetts National Guard unit to come home, returned to civilian life following the parade.

Marching from the Hingham Armory, the unit was greeted by the Hingham High School band, the 215th Army band, veterans groups, a police motorcade, and thick crowds of bystanders.

Students representing each of the Hingham schools were present for the 10 a.m. ceremony. Students at the nearby St. Paul's School watched from the steps of the church.

Many local businesses closed up shop to attend; "Be back after the parade" signs adorned many doors.

Hingham selectmen, State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, and Maj. Gen. Wayne Wagner, the Massachusetts adjutant general, all welcomed the unit home from a viewing stand near the school administration building at 14 Main St.

Diane St. Laurent, the head of the 1058th Family Support Group, and Lyn Gordon, the moving force behind Friends of Operation Desert Shield, were duly noted atop the reviewing stand.

E. Gardner Jones, spoke of the contrast between the farewell in September and the homecoming.

"We have a particularly different and joyous occasion," he said.

Wagner said it was a proud day for the people of Hingham and the country.

"This is a great day to be an American," he said. "It is a great day to be a soldier. It is a great day to be an Army national guardsman.

"I do not think we can do enough to show our gratitude for what you men and women have done for us.

He said that the "the will, spirit, training and ability of the American fighting men" proved that reservists can take their rightful place among regular service men.

He said this "total force policy" harkens back to the days of the early militia.

He said Hingham's outpouring of support was "indicative of small town America."

Wagner said Saddam Hussein, who had "fourth largest army in the world and the first largest ego," thought "he could play Vietnam all over again."

He said support from the home front dashed Hussein's plans, and energized the servicemen.

"I really wish we had better videotapes of what happened in September," he said, thanking the crowd for its dedication.

He presented each member of the unit with a new ribbon, created by the state, for veterans of Operation Desert Storm.

The brown stripe on the ribbon represents the desert; the yellow stripe represents the yellow ribbons that supported the troops; and blue and white are the state colors of Massachusetts.

Sen. Hedlund said he was impressed by the size of the crowd that gathered to welcome the unit home.

"This isn't just Main Street, Hingham," he said, "this is Main Street, USA."

Murray, a retired Marine, wiped tears from her eyes throughout the event. She said she was glad the unit made it home safe.

"What a thrill it was to see you walk down that street," she said. "Thank you very much for being so good to us and being such great people.

She presented the unit with a proclamation "in recognition of a job well done."

Capt. Nancy Souza, the unit's commander, thanked the town for its support.

She called the rally in September "a valiant send-off" that "touched each and everyone of the soldiers."

She said although only a handful of the unit was from Hingham, the entire unit felt the town's support.

"While in Saudi Arabia, we flew the Hingham flag so proudly during the war," she said. "It was a sign that we would return home safely."

Souza, with a giant pair of scissors from the army, then cut into a giant yellow ribbon that encircled the reviewing stand.

It was over.

Private thoughts before leaving for an uncertain destination.

With respect and honor

The town paid formal tribute to its most recent victim of war during Memorial Day ceremonies that followed the traditional path.

While there were only 263 official casualties of the war in the Persian Gulf out of more than 500,000 members of the US military involved, one of the dead was a Hingham man.

The grandmother of the town's Gulf casualty, Barbara Bessom, helped the town close its Memorial Day ceremonies at the Harbor. She handed a wreath to the town's Harbormaster Robert Buotte and a Coast Guardsman. The wreath was taken to sea to honor the memory of those who died in time of war on the water.

Mrs. Bessom's grandson, Army Sgt. Paul Burt, died shortly after the Iraqi combat ceased. He was a victim of a heart attack at 24.

Sgt. Burt grew up in Norwell.

When his own mother died of a heart attack the year he turned 16, he moved to Hingham to live with his grandmother.

He was a 1986 graduate of Hingham High. He joined the service directly following graduation.

Sgt. Burt was a paratrooper. He had completed a four-year stint in the service with tours of duty in Hounduras. He returned to the area after his enlistment expired but re-enlisted after failing to find a job he was interested in.

He was buried at a national military cemetery at Fort Bragg, N.C.

Col. Francis Cadigan, US Medical Corps retired, talked briefly at Hingham Harbor to the crowd assembled. He pointed out that Sgt. Burt was married only seven months.

His wife, Jennifer Burt, was only 20 when the couple married August 26. Shortly after their wedding, Sgt. Burt was deployed to the Persian Gulf.

"Eternal vigilance is the price of freedom," Cadigan said as he went on to explain the tradition of honoring all the war dead.

He pointed out that the tradition began with the women of the Confederacy but General Logan of the Grand Army of the Republic ordered his troops to follow the practice.

Cadigan said he prays that the children assembled would only know the sound of gunfire from hearing the Memorial Day salute.

He said no one at last year's ceremony expected this country to find itself in a conflict within the year.

He pointed out that the small number of casualties in the Gulf War is little solace to "those who lost loved ones."

Brig. Gen. Neal welcomes the new pride in America

By Marilyn Jackson
South Look staff

When U.S. Marine Corps Brig. Gen. Richard I. Neal comes home again on his next leave, he will help conduct a Boston Pops concert at the Esplanade during the July 4 Independence Day festivities.

Brig. Gen. Neal

The Hull native, catapulted to fame during Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm, recently was in Massachusetts to receive an honorary doctorate in military science from Northeastern University, his alma mater.

Working closely with Gen. H. Norman Schwartzkopf, Neal was deputy director of operations, helping develop the ground campaign and "running the war room."

This meant he handled all the press inquiries and briefings.

For the career officer, this was a new role.

Last July when he was promoted to the rank of brigadier general — which he described as "awesome" — he spent a week at "charm school," learning about public relations in a crash course.

"We did some remote and some live TV and saw how foolish we looked."

He said he never thought he actually would be facing the hundreds of microphones and television cameras that he did during the campaign.

When Iraq invaded Kuwait Aug. 2, Neal's wife asked him, "Will they grab you?" He said he didn't think so, but a month later he was in Saudi Arabia.

He said Schwartzkopf knew the allied forces may go to the offensive and sent for a "B.G." who had been in ground combat.

Neal had served two tours of duty in Vietnam.

"Plus," he explained, "I had spent two years in all those countries — Saudi Arabia, the Sudan, Qatar, Bahrain, the Arab Emirates."

Neal said he does not speak Arabic, but most of the individuals he dealt with went to Western schools and spoke English.

Neal described Schwartzkopf as "an emotional man who does not suffer fools easily.

"He should expect the best and if he doesn't get it, he demands it.

"He does have a temper, but he carried the burden of the safety of 541,000 troops," said Neal.

Following one of the briefings, he received a telephone call from the Gen. Colin I. Powell, chairman of the Chiefs of Staff, who told him that by dealing with the press, he hoped there wouldn't have to be a ground campaign.

"It was a supreme stroke.

"Then he busted my bubble and said, 'The little old ladies in tennis shoes just love you.'"

During a recent appearance on Continental Cablevision's "Pierson to Person" show, host Wigmore Pierson bombarded Neal with questions, and Neal fielded them with ease.

He said to prepare for the daily briefings during the Persian Gulf conflict, he "rehearsed" with Mike Gallagher, a young lieutenant colonel, who tried to think of every question the press would ask that afternoon.

During his interview with Pierson, Neal spoke from "the Neal perspective" about women in combat.

"I wouldn't want to see women in combat with bayonets in a foxhole. Having been there twice, it's bad enough for a man.

"You have to carry everything with you on your back . . . 70 to 80 pounds. You're not even talking about weapons and equipment.

"Physiologically, that's one strike against women.

"War is a horrific thing to begin with . . . and this was a a 43-day campaign."

He noted that two women during the Persian Gulf war were shot down and captured. "They came through well," he said.

The politics of Kuwait and the predicament of the Kurds and Shiites, Neal said, were beyond his scope of expertise.

But, he added, the United States should not be in the business of building nations, dividing Iraq for a Kurdish state.

As for whether Saddam Hussein should be tried for war crimes, Neal said if there is material that would lead to charges, the United Nations should pursue it.

A yellow ribbon adorns the statue of the Union soldier on the Civil War Monument at Scituate's Lawson Park.

"There should be some accountability for the atrocities, the burning of the oil fields, but that is beyond the province of a young brigadier," he said.

Asked whether the United States overestimated Saddam Hussein's military capabilities, Neal said the United States, as a coalition member, "proved we were number one."

"I can't say enough about the 541,000 who served," he said. "The National Guard performed superbly, they played a significant role.

"The only way the 82nd (Airborne) got to battle was because of the 1058th," he said. The 1058th Transportation Division is based in Hingham.

"We wouldn't have been as effective without the National Guard."

Neal said he was looking forward to his 10-day leave and the Fourth of July celebrations.

The pride in America throughout the nation is welcome. "It serves us well, and it's about time. It feels good."

Thank You

Our memories of old soldiers will never die

By Mike Hardman
Mariner staff

It was a Sunday afternoon in April. Abington's John Donaghy was in the spotlight, yet the Army captain was willing to share his moment with the veterans from another time.

The Abington native had spent six months living in the desert in Saudi Arabia. One of the first local soldiers to return, he was given the royal treatment.

While addressing the crowd at the "United We Stand" parade, Donaghy remembered the Vietnam Veterans., They never got the royal treatment.

"I feel guilty," said Donaghy. "My father told me when I got off the plane that I had been in a 100-hour war. All these guys (the Vietnam Era Veterans) were in a war that was 800 times longer."

The Vietnam vets who served in the Persian Gulf were a great help to officers like Donaghy.

"The Vietnam guys taught us a lot and we didn't make any mistakes this time," said Donaghy. "We did this (the parade) for them. I was a school child at the time, but I remember. These guys deserve as big a welcome as I got."

After the speech, Donaghy said it was time to honor the Vietnam veterans.

"I have great respect for the Vietnam veterans. I felt it was appropriate to honor them."

Parade organizer Becky Coit, a leader in the effort to help the Vietnam Veterans, was moved by the speech. Tears flowed when she had to address the crowd after Donaghy was finished.

"I was very impressed with Capt. Donaghy," said Coit. "He was very unselfish. I'm sure the Vietnam veterans appreciated it."

Donaghy admonished the gathered crowd, asking them to treat all the veterans as he was treated when he returned.

"It's important the last guy home get the same treatment as the first guys home," said Donaghy. "It's important they get the red carpet treatment."

After some leave time in Abington, Donaghy returned to his unit, the Third Armored Cavalry Unit in El Paso, Tex.

Voters oppose local sludge dump

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

Town meeting gave a resounding vote June 26 against dumping grit and screenings from the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority, MWRA, sewer system at Cohasset Heights Landfill, CHL.

Paul Barry, owner of the landfill, has given a proposal to sell CHL for $20 million to the committee appointed by Gov. William Weld that is investigating alternative sites to a planned Massachusetts Water Resources Authority landfill in Walpole.

Nearly 400 people packed into the sweltering Cohasset High School gym to hear Barry and members of Stop Any Further Expansion, SAFE, a group that opposes the landfill's expansion and MWRA involvement, argue the issue. There was no article on town meeting floor, only a resolution.

After more than an hour of debate, town meeting overwhelmingly voted to support SAFE's resolution giving selectmen a mandate to take necessary steps against MWRA use of the site.

Opponents of the landfill, which is less than one mile away from the town's major water supply, said expansion could pose health risks.

They were hopeful the the vote will close the door to the MWRA.

Barry maintained that opening a dialogue with the MWRA would not lock the town into an agreement.

The landfill is currently undergoing a review process for an expansion that would nearly double its size.

Barry said he was confident the expansion would be approved, but cautioned the meeting that he would not

More than $8,000 was raised last weekend by more than 300 tennis players in the Second Annual Cohasset Community Center Benefit Tennis Tournament held on various private courts in town.

The money will be used by the Community Center for the purchase of new equipment, as well as providing scholarships for children who can't afford nursery school, and helping out with the mortgage reduction program.

"The tourney was a tremendous success for everyone involved," said event co-chairman Betsy Walsh Connolly of Cohasset.

Linda Coyle, of Cohasset was the other co-chairman for the event.

"The weather was wonderful, the tennis was highly competitive and the money will be going to a good cause."

In the inaugural event last year, more than 200 players raised $5,000 for the Community Center.

This year, the participation and the money raised increased dramatically. Of the 300 plus players involved this year, there were 115 children.

Children donated $10 to participate in the event, while adults donated $30 to participate.

In addition, Gillette and Stop and Shop donated funds to the event.

On Friday, the children played round-robin doubles tournaments to determine winners in beginning, intermediate and advanced levels.

After the children's tourney was decided, an ice cream party was held at the Community Center for those who participated.

Winners from the beginner girls category were:
Jacqueline Kahn and Lydia Guild.
Kim Welby and Katie Brister.
Elizabeth Hurley and Michelle Buckley.
And Danielle Nohe and Tammy Maitland.
All the winners were from Cohasset.

Doc Skinna hopes to get out of 'the dumps'

By Roberta Brooks

At the Cohasset Recycling and Transfer Station, recycling has reached an art form — and the artist-in-residence is Joe "Doc Skinna" Laugelle.

For 23 years, since the days it was called the dump, Doc Skinna has presided over the facility on Cedar Street. "When I first got this job, they gave me a shovel and a pack of matches," he grins. "At the end of the day I just burned everything." Since then things have changed.

Now Cohasset recycles or transfers about 80 percent of its trash. Recycling became mandatory in Cohasset a year and a half ago and Doc Skinna enforces the rules. "I'm police, judge and jury here," he says with a gleam in his eye.

He saunters over to the back of a van, sticks his head in, checks over the bagged trash, and says, "This lady is a good recycler."

Bates Building discussion

Last Wednesday at town meeting, Arne Gjesteby, advisory board chairman, spoke out against the proposed sale of the Bates Building for $1.

"This is not a time to give away town property," he said.

Gjesteby praised the efforts made by many departments to keep costs down. He cited the board of health for saving the town $15,000 by forgoing an approved equipment purchase.

McCombs replaces Leahy

Jane McCombs is the new manager of Kimball's By the Sea. She replaces Dan Leahy who has accepted a job with National Abatement, a Hingham-based company.

Leahy is former president of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce.

MBTA abatement lost

Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, sponsored an amendment with some of his senate colleagues that would eliminate the MBTA assessments on those communities which do not receive direct MBTA services. The amendment failed to pass.

It would have saved Cohasset $144,953, Duxbury $232,871, Hull $194,171, Marshfield $439,258 and Scituate $344,728. The abatement was allowed last year. Sen. Hedlund said he will continue in his efforts to save or restore funds to the district so as to help stop further reductions in funding for services and education.

Hedlund was able to steer his amendment of the Blue Laws which would maintain current holiday status for Labor Day, Memorial Day and Fourth of July. The Senate Ways and Means proposal would have authorized stores to open after noon on those days.

Police Chief Kealey wins back pay plus two percent

Police chief Joseph Kealey will be paid a one-time settlement of $10,000 because he was underpaid

A "ratio law" repealed in 1989 provided that police and fire chiefs be paid at least 1.8 times the base salary of their highest paid employee.

Kealey was never reimbursed the differeence in pay as a result of the law and was owed $17,851 in back pay.

At a meeting of the board before town meeting June 26, Selectman voted 4-0 to pay Kealey $10,000 to settle the matter.

Selectmen also extended Kealey's contract one year, approved a 2 percent raise retroactive to March, and offered a 3 percent raise beginning March 17, 1992.

Kealey is currently in the final year of a three year contract.

The settlement was negotiated by Selectman Diana Kornet and Chairman Ned Tebbetts.

Town meeting tidied up loose sums in books

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

Town meeting went back into the books last week to balance the Cohasset's budget.

At the June 26 continuation of a meeting recessed in April, voters approved an advisory board plan to balance the budget by pushing one month of teachers salaries into next year's budget and transfering money from the town's "free cash" account.

On May 18, the town voted in favor of three overrides, adding an additional $146,169 to the tax rolls.

According to the advisory board, this amount, along with the 2.5 percent property tax increase allowed by state law, would have enabled Cohasset to balance its 1992 budget, provided state aid was not cut.

According to Arne Gjesteby, the chairman of the advisory board, state aid remains a problem. (The town meeting action came before the legislature adopted a budget. The new budget falls within the range of the advisors projections.)

A handout at town meeting explained that the state House of Representatives and Senate have both voted a state budget, but have different figures for state aid cuts.

Gjesteby said in order to set the town budget, the advisory board was going to "work with the worst case scenario" presented by the senate version.

The senate plan forces Cohasset to reduce expenditures by $180,000, or use available funds to offset the amount.

According to the handout, the assessors have returned $82,291 from the overlay account for 1986-1988.

The advisory board recommended using this amount, funding the balance of the deficit from free cash.

Gjesteby said this is possible because the senate plan allows towns to "push 1/12 of teacher salaries ($288,000 for Cohasset)" into the fiscal 1993 budget.

Gjesteby called the provision a "budgetary gimmick," and said even though it helps the town this year, it will force Cohasset to either vote an override or down-size government next year.

Ralph Kidder of the school committee agreed, calling the plan no more than "a cute gimmick that appeals to people in the legislature."

Kidder said it gives the "appearance of a balanced budget, but not the reality of a balanced budget."

Gjesteby said the advisory board's recommendation would decrease Cohasset's "free cash account" from $368,463 to $270,754.

"This is less than we would like it to be," the handout read. "We are hoping that state aid will be higher than anticipated. If that were to be the case, we would hope to preserve more of our 'free cash'."

Gjesteby said the dwindling amount of "free cash" makes it apparent that the town has to down-size its departments.

Gjesteby restated his stand that it is "getting more and more obvious that it is time to down-size the fire department."

He said it is a key time to trim the department because it is currently operating without a new contract and will soon have a new chief.

"How much do we want to spend for fire protection?" Gjesteby asked. "What kind of fire protection do we need and want."

Meeting violation charged

At Monday night's selectmen's meeting, the board came under fire for alleged open meeting law violations.

Robert Davenport, a resident and volunteer for Continental Cablevisions, which broadcasts the board's meetings, said selectmen had no justification for going into executive session to discuss negotiations for the movie "Housesitter."

Davenport said that the discussions did not fall under open meeting law.

He said that even though the results of those negotiations have been made public, the bargaining session should have been open to the public.

He said that when he approached town counsel with his concerns, he was told by Richard Henderson that the situation had been discussed with the board.

Davenport said that at town meeting he overheard Henderson asking the board an opinion on whether the closed-door session was legal, despite Henderson's claim that the problem had already been addressed.

Rocco Laugelle told Davenport he did not think his concern was an issue. "Why are we making such a big thing about this," he asked. "Why don't you just drop it."

Davenport said that even though the result of the meeting was not controversial, the board cannot violate open meeting law.

Jane Goedecke said she did not like the "innuendo" that laced Davenport's charges. "I do not think it is fair for you to assume you were lied to," she said.

Selectman Diana Kornet said the board thought an executive session was necessary to "protect the interests of the town."

After allowing Davenport to have his say, the board concluded that they did nothing wrong, and moved forward.

Outgoing Leahy defends Kimball's sign

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

Dan Leahy may no longer be the manager of Kimball's By The Sea, but his was back in town hall Monday night to defend the sign that has become his legacy.

Following more than 40 minutes of discussion, the board voted not to oppose the sign before the state outdoor advertising commission if Kimball's replaced the current lighting with cooler, diffused light bulbs.

Several months ago the restaurant and inn erected a new sign on Route 3A to replace an older, deteriorating sign.

The sign was originally approved by the building inspector, but has since been criticized for its bright light and appearance.

As part of the state outdoor advertising commission's review process, the board of selectmen was asked to comment on the new sign.

Selectman Jane Goedecke raised concerns that the sign was "not in keeping with the character" of the town.

She called the sign 'visually disturbing and garish" and said less lighting would be more appropriate.

"Something a little less plastic," she suggested.

Selectman Martha Gjesteby said she received a complaint that the sign was "blinding" to drivers turning at Sohier Street.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle called that claim "ridiculous" and said he supported the new sign.

"Go down Route 1 if you want to see some signs," he said. "As much as I dislike signs, that sign...compared to what was there before, is 100 percent better."

Selectman Diana Kornet said she received several calls from people who think the sign looks "synthetic."

Laugelle said that he had not heard any comments for or against the sign.

"I don't think its that bad," he said.

Gjesteby said she "kind of liked the old sign" and called it "quaint."

Leahy defended the sign's appearance.

He said he originally considered a design featuring a "mini-Mr. Kimball," but the the zoning by-law requires that the new sign had to conform to the dimensions of the old sign.

He said he had taken every precaution designing the sign to ensure that he would "not wind up right where I am now."

He said a detailed schematic drawing of the sign's lighting, submitted to the building inspector passed muster.

Leahy said the sign is "no brighter than any other sign" and that its brightness has "already diminished" as the bulbs wore down.

He said there is no bylaw or regulation "regulating a sign's brightness" and blamed his problems on the "personal distaste of a number of powerful town figures" who pressured the board to "find a way to get rid of that sign."

"We did what this town asked us...you cannot come back five months later and say 'we made a mistake, take it down'." Leahy said, adding it was "difficult to legislate aesthetics."

Leahy said he has had numerous travellers who found the hotel thanks to the sign.

He said to diminish the impact of the sign would hurt his business and others in the area.

"Suffice it to say that for every dollar spent at Kimball's, there is another dollar spent within the community," he said.

He called the sign a "magnet that gets cars off Route 3A."

"The best bang for the buck is that sign," Leahy said.

When pressed, Leahy said there were lightbulbs with a cooler, diffused light that could be used in the sign.

He said that even though this lighting would take away "some of the crispness" of the sign, he would consider it.

In a 4-1 vote the board agreed not to object to the sign if Leahy would use the diffused lighting.

Kornet voted against the motion.

"I have had too many people who would rather see a wooden sign lit from the front," she said.

Conservation commissioners are all reappointed

Despite talk that they were looking for new blood on the conservation commission, all three members up for reappointment were asked back for another term.

Merle Brown, William Parmenter, and Jeff Waal were all reappointed for another three-year term on the commission.

Selectmen had discussed changing the dynamics of the board, and all three said they had heard, through various sources, that they would not be asked back.

Beach vendors and selectmen have reached an argeement

Selectmen and several beach vendors have reached an agreement that both hope will solve a dilemma on Sandy Beach.

The board accidentally violated zoning bylaws by appointing several vendors and allowing them to canvass Sandy Beach with out any limitations.

Town bylaw only allows two vendors at a time to be on the beach.

Following a recent meeting with the vendors a compromise was reached.

The ice cream vendors will take turns on weekends, sharing the beach with a hot dog vendor.

A pizza vendor will have reign on weekdays.

Details released on 'Housesitter'

A contract is now headed on its way to the producers of the film "Housesitter."

According to Selectman Jane Goedecke, who negotiated on behalf of the board, selectmen have agreed to a contract and are awaiting final approval by the production company.

Producers have verbally agreed to pay the town $5,000 for permission to shoot for up to a week in mid-August.

Location manager Michael Williams said scouts were still looking for a storefront to serve as a grocery store in the film.

He said other area business, such as the Red Lion Inn, were also being scouted for interior and exterior scenes. He said individual contracts would be drawn with any businesses used for the film.

In addition to the cash offering, the town will also get to keep several trees producers plan to plant in the downtown area.

This is not the first time the town has received a cash offering by allowing a film company to set up shop.

In 1986, producers of "The Witches of Eastwick" paid the town $25,000 following an extensive shoot in the common area.

Goedecke said this payment was a gift and not a contractual obligation.

"Housesitter" will star Steve Martin and Meg Ryan. The romantic comedy is being directed by Frank Oz, better known as the voice of Miss Piggy, for Imagine Pictures.

be "around to run the landfill forever."

He said it would be to the town's advantage to sell the landfill to the MWRA, which could insure its proper management.

In a letter to residents, Barry implored the town to consider his proposal.

"Remember our site is a landfill now and it is not going away," he wrote. "This proposed grit and screenings landfill would substantially down-size the present landfill operation.

"The MWRA would bring added administration and technical expertise in the management of the site."

He said the MWRA was willing to "negotiate a financial package with the hosting community."

Barry said using the landfill for grit and screenings would be a "small operation" that would accept only four or five truckloads a day.

He said conventional solid waste would be a "big operation" with more than 20 trucks coming and going daily.

He said grit and screenings would not produce toxic leachate or wind-blown litter, two unwanted impacts of conventional solid waste.

Kevin O'Donnell of SAFE urged town meeting to support the committee's resolution.

He said the MWRA was not interested in a site without community approval, and that a vote in favor of the resolution would keep the authority out of Cohasset.

"It is not a bargain to get the grit and screenings," he said. "Once the MWRA gets control of the property it is an all or nothing proposition.

"This is the last chance the town has to have any control over the authority. Don't be tricked and don't be fooled."

Pat Walsh, the secretary of the conservation commission, said the screenings could contain medical waste and other undesirable materials.

She said there would also be a severe odor problem, joking that the town could use chemicals to scent the landfill with an "orange, lemon, cherry, or bubble gum" aroma.

Barry said he only wanted the town to keep "an open mind" to his suggestion.

"The landfill exists now, it is not going to go away," he said. "What will it cost the town to see what will be offered."

"I want to see Cohasset get the best it can out of the site," he said.

Wayne Sawchuck of the advisory board said he would prefer to see the landfill used for grit and screenings, rather than traditional trash.

He said the town could be plagued by "blowing trash and sea gulls" if the expansion was used for conventional solid waste.

Barry said he was disappointed by the outcome, would honor the "will of the people."

Doc Skinna hopes to get out . . .

cardboard bin (it shouldn't), and where the mailing tube in her other hand should go (the regular trash).

"Ninety-five percent of people are cooperative," Doc insists as he surveys the different stations where people leave their trash.

And if they're not? "We send them a letter. After three warnings we revoke their dump privileges; we won't accept their trash."

Joe Laugelle became Doc Skinna years ago. 'Doc' happened when Joe tried to treat his brother's psoriasis. 'Skinny' became 'Skinna' due to a liquor-store employee who spoke broken English.

Before working at the Recycling and Transfer Station, Doc worked for the highway department, and he also has served three years in the army.

Joe Laugelle's roots go deep in Cohasset. "My grandfather, Tony Modente, was the first Italian to settle in this town," says Doc, "and I have a brother who is a selectman, and another brother who is Trees & Parks Superintendent."

Doc Skinna was Cohasset's rubbish baron through the days of open burning and before recycling gained popularity.

In the late 1970s, the sanitary landfill laws banned trash burning. Every night rubbish had to be covered with six inches of dirt.

The town had to purchase that cover and this method ate up space so fast, that Cohasset became interested in recycling. "Making recycling mandatory was a big step to save space and keep taxes down," says Doc.

Now Cohasset saves $63.21 for every ton of material recycled. Recycled so far this year: 1,000 tons of trash.

All this takes time, and Doc Skinna asks residents to: "Rinse out your milk bottles and your tin cans. Don't bother taking labels off glass or tin cans, but do take the rings off the wine bottles. Put newspapers in brown paper bags."

Not all residents work hard at recycling, and Doc Skinna lets those people know. If he sees a dirty jar, he'll ask, "Excuse me, could you wash that out?"

Doc takes his job seriously and feels, "The nation's #1 problem is getting rid of trash."

"This is the only town in the area where recycling is mandatory," says Doc, "but people realize that in the future recycling will be the law."

Community participation will make things easier for Doc's last year as head of the Recycling and Transfer Station.

"Twenty-three years is enough in any job, says Doc, "I plan to leave a year from July." He doesn't know yet what he will do, but "I don't ever want to retire."

Doc Skinna's not 'down in the dumps' about finishing his time at the Recycling and Transfer Station though; he's looking forward to Saturdays and Sundays off for the first time in years.

Landfill fight not yet over

SAFE (Stop Any Further Expension) recently warned residents the fight against MWRA sludge is not yet over, and will not be over until the state Sludge Siting Commission issues its report on Aug. 1.

"We thank the nearly 400 Cohasset voters who turned out at the June 26 Town Meeting to support our resolution," said SAFE President Alix White. "This overwhelming show of community opposition to accepting MWRA sludge in Cohasset will help persuade the Sludge Siting Commission to reject Cohasset as a disposal site."

"Unfortunately," said SAFE member John McNabb Jr., "we have been informed by the commission that, while this town meeting vote is very significant, the vote itself does not drop Cohasset from their list. Also, Cohasset Heights Limited is still seeking a solid waste expansion."

"Before the commission issues its report on Aug. 1," said McNabb, "Cohasset residents need to send a message to Environmental Affairs Secretary Susan Tierney that the residents of Cohasset, because of many serious environmental concerns and the threat to Lily Pond, strongly oppose siting an MWRA dump, or a solid waste dump, at CHL."

"We urge every Cohasset resident to write to Secretary Tierney (EOEA, Room 2000, 100 Cambridge St., Boston 02202), and to send this letter soon," said McNabb.

Leo's Hockey Tigers lose to Archbishop Williams' Royals

Submitted by John Kinchla

Cohasset's entry in the Pilgrim Arena's Summer High School Developmental Hockey Program, Leo's Tigers, achieved a measure of success despite being beaten by the Division 2 State Hockey Champs, Archbishop Williams' Royals, 4 to 1.

The Royals scored first in this contest, then another. The Tigers however came roaring back. Cohasset's fifth line winger, Matt Graves, stole an errant Royals' pass. Graves fed Tiger center, Billy Roberts, whose shot bounced off the Royals' goalie and rebounded to Brendan Kinchla who was trailing the play. Kinchla scored his first varsity goal with a backhand shot into the left corner of the net.

The Royals scored twice more before the game ended, but Cohasset held their own against the State Champs. Cohasset's Mike Reynolds had several excellent solo opportunities but came up dry. Kevin Mulcahy's slap shots caused Williams' defenders to jump away in flight, yet his shots failed to tally. Tiger Tim Conroy, playing with bronchitis, moved up to a wing position for this game and he had several good chances that were turned away.

Cohasset's reshuffled blue line corp of Seniors Kevin Mulcahy and Charlie Shields, and underclassmen converted winger/defensemen Charlie Endris and John Kinchla played superbly. Mulcahy, a South Shore League All Star this year, continues to play with savvy and intensity. Shields is rapidly developing into an All Star prospect and possible a Division 1 player.

The Tigers success in this first game of the summer program can best be measured by comparing this game to an earlier 7 to 1 loss to Williams in the spring program. Several more Tiger players should be credited with keeping the margin close. Cohasset goal keepers Senior, Jeff Stone and eighth grader Jeff Tosi played outstanding games in the net. Both boys let in two Williams' goals apiece, while stopping 15 shots each. Stone played brilliantly through the first thirty minutes. Tosi then took over and played magnificently. Tosi's concentration was remarkable. Jeff is not a big player, but he is courageous in the net and well schooled.

Many other Tiger players contributed with outstanding games. Many had good scoring opportunities, others failed to shoot.

Brendan Kinchla's goal following a broken Royals' play temporarily sparked the Tigers as one after another of the players soloed across the Williams' blue line. Cohasset's Pat Reynolds, Anthony Wigmore, Chris McKenna, Mike Riley, Brian Buckley and Nathan Mucci frequently journeyed into Williams' territory but their shots were either blocked or stopped. Cohasset had twenty shots on net to Williams' thirty.

The Tiger good news is that the offense should begin to really perk with the addition of 10th grader Charlie Endris to the summer roster. Charlie is a potent two way player with skating skill and excellent hockey sense. He is a threat to score from anywhere on the ice. The Tiger bad news is that winger Matt Kramers may be unavailable for the Tigers' Friday night games. Kramers has contributed to the Tigers' successes over the last three seasons. Losing Matt will hurt the Tigers. He is a quality first line player.

Five Cohasset lines played against Williams as Cohasset made use of all their personnel. Some of Cohasset's younger players skated first and second line shifts with their more advanced teammates. Overall, Cohasset's performance against the Royals is another positive benchmark towards another successful high school hockey season.

More hockey action

The real story behind Leo's Tigers win over Hull may never fully be known. Whatever sparked the Tigers over the last thirty minutes of play remains unspoken. But whatever snapped loose within the Tigers had a life force of its own.

Cohasset did not seem destined to prevail in this contest. Neither first string goaltender Jeff Stone nor backup tender Jeff Tosi could make the game. First string defensemen Kevin Mulcahy and Tim Conroy arrived late. And right wing Chris McKenna made his

We need more ideas like the Harborfest!

The town's first Harborfest was a smashing success.

Of course, the fact that the South Shore Art Center's 36th annual Art Festival happened on the same weekend was a boon for the organizers.

But the point is that this community worked together to build an atmosphere of fun at little expense. The success proves that people can indeed celebrate on a low budget.

"Harborfest was conceived to broaden community participation in the festival and cumulatively celebrate cooperation, creativity and concern for others. The Art Festival/Harborfest offers all of us the chance to work together. Take the time to enjoy yourselves, smile a lot, and spread the good feelings of belonging to a cohesive community," according to the steering committee.

From the rock concert in Cohasset Village where High Tension performed with high energy to the elegant parade, the extra activities of Harborfest were high grade.

Harborfest was pulled together by the Rev. Gary Ritts of the Cohasset Clergy Association, who organized the blessing of the fleet; Mary Hartwell and Deborah Martin of the Social Service League, who organized the chowder contest; the Cohasset High School class of 1992 who ran the Harbor games; Don Harrold of the Cohasset Rotary Club who organized the pancake breakfast, with the assistance of the Council on Aging; Keith Knowles of the Chamber of Commerce, who organized the parade; Harbormaster Irving Gadow and Jim Lagrotteria, representing the Mass. Lobstermen, who organized the parade of boats and Bob Martin of the Harborfest Steering Committee, who organized the youth concert.

Meg Robbins served as chairman of the Art Festival. The festival ran with its usual precision and beauty. The Community Garden Club of Cohasset gave a standard flower show and floral Art Interpretations. The flowers were lovely, of course.

Carillon concerts filled the streets below the towers of St. Stephen's and musicians from the South Shore Conservatory added to the ambiance.

There was so much more.

This is what the sagging economy needs.

Special interest voters hit

To the Editor:

Large numbers of people left the town meeting immediately after a vote was taken on a resolution opposing discussion with the state about using Cohasset Heights landfill for MWRA screenings, leaving several important issues to those remaining. It's a familiar phenomenon; the democratic process seems to have degenerated into concentration on single issues while taking no responsibility for the spectrum of issues. The spectacle, at nearly every meeting, of mass departures after certain votes, should embarrass the guilty as well as offending those who remain. But it's all relative; those who appear only for the articles they happen to care about are more responsible than those who don't show at all, but less responsible than those who suffer to the end.

To the Editor:

SAFE (Stop Any Further Expansion) would like to THANK the 400 residents of Cohasset who attended the June 26 Town Meeting and who supported the successful SAFE resolution.

The overwhelming favorable vote on the SAFE resolution will play a significant role in preventing the state Sludge Siting Commission from placing a MWRA dump in Cohasset.

Art Festival workers give thanks

To the Editor:

On behalf of the South Shore Art Center, I would like to thank the many volunteers, donors, arts councils, performers, advertisers, award sponsors and product donors that made the 36th SSAC Art Festival possible.

Particular thanks go to the Harborfest Committee including Bob Martin of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, Don Harrold of the Cohasset Rotary, Jim Lagrotterria, Gary Ritts of the Cohasset Clergy Association, Parade Marshal, Keith Knowles, and Mary Hartwell and Deborah Martin of the Social Service League for their creative and dedicated management of the event. The much-appreciated cooperation of town officials and employees, Harbormaster Irving Gadow, and local shops helped make the day a success.

Widespread product contributions added significant quality to the event – baked goods by Cohasset's Bread Shop, the Council on Aging (in memory of Ray Remick), Girl Scout Troop 4339, Hingham's Everyday Gourmet, and Scituate's Country Gourmet and Blue Rhonda. Fruits from Lamberts of Quincy, in-kind gifts from Roebuck's Catering, Sea 'n Cheese, Kimballs-By-The-Sea, Cape Cod Potato Chips, Frito-Lay, ice cream from H.P. Hood, and coffee from Dunkin' Donuts showed wide corporate support.

Generous gifts from L. Knife of Kingston, Liquors Unlimited of Cohasset Village, Pepsi Cola, Ocean Spray Cranberries, Harpoon Ale and Coca Cola whet the whistle at private and public gatherings throughout the three-day event. We thank the Nickerson Theatres, Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, Polly Logan, Browning-Ferris Industries, South Shore Bank, the Second Congregational and St. Stephen's churches for use of space and equipment.

Gillette provided the free children's workshops with artistic materials. We are also grateful to Rik Tinory for the rock concert by "High Tension" on Saturday evening and Continental Cablevision, Channels 4 and 5, and The Mariner Publications for promotional efforts and excellent coverage.

Since it is not possible to name everyone involved here, it is our hope that the thousands of people who enjoyed the event will note the list of sponsors in the Festival Brochure, and join us in thanking them personally for their support of the arts on the South Shore.

Thank you,
Meg Robbins, Chair
36th SSAC Art Festival

Also honored was Michael Jay Solomon, President of Warner Brothers International Television, who attended Emerson as a student. Solomon was granted an Honorary Doctor of Laws at the ceremony.

'Twas a Fourth to remember

By Tom Henshaw
Mariner staff

In the time and town where we grew up . . .

You could tell the Fourth of July was coming when that vacant store down the street was transformed overnight into a magic kingdom of fireworks.

And they were for sale!

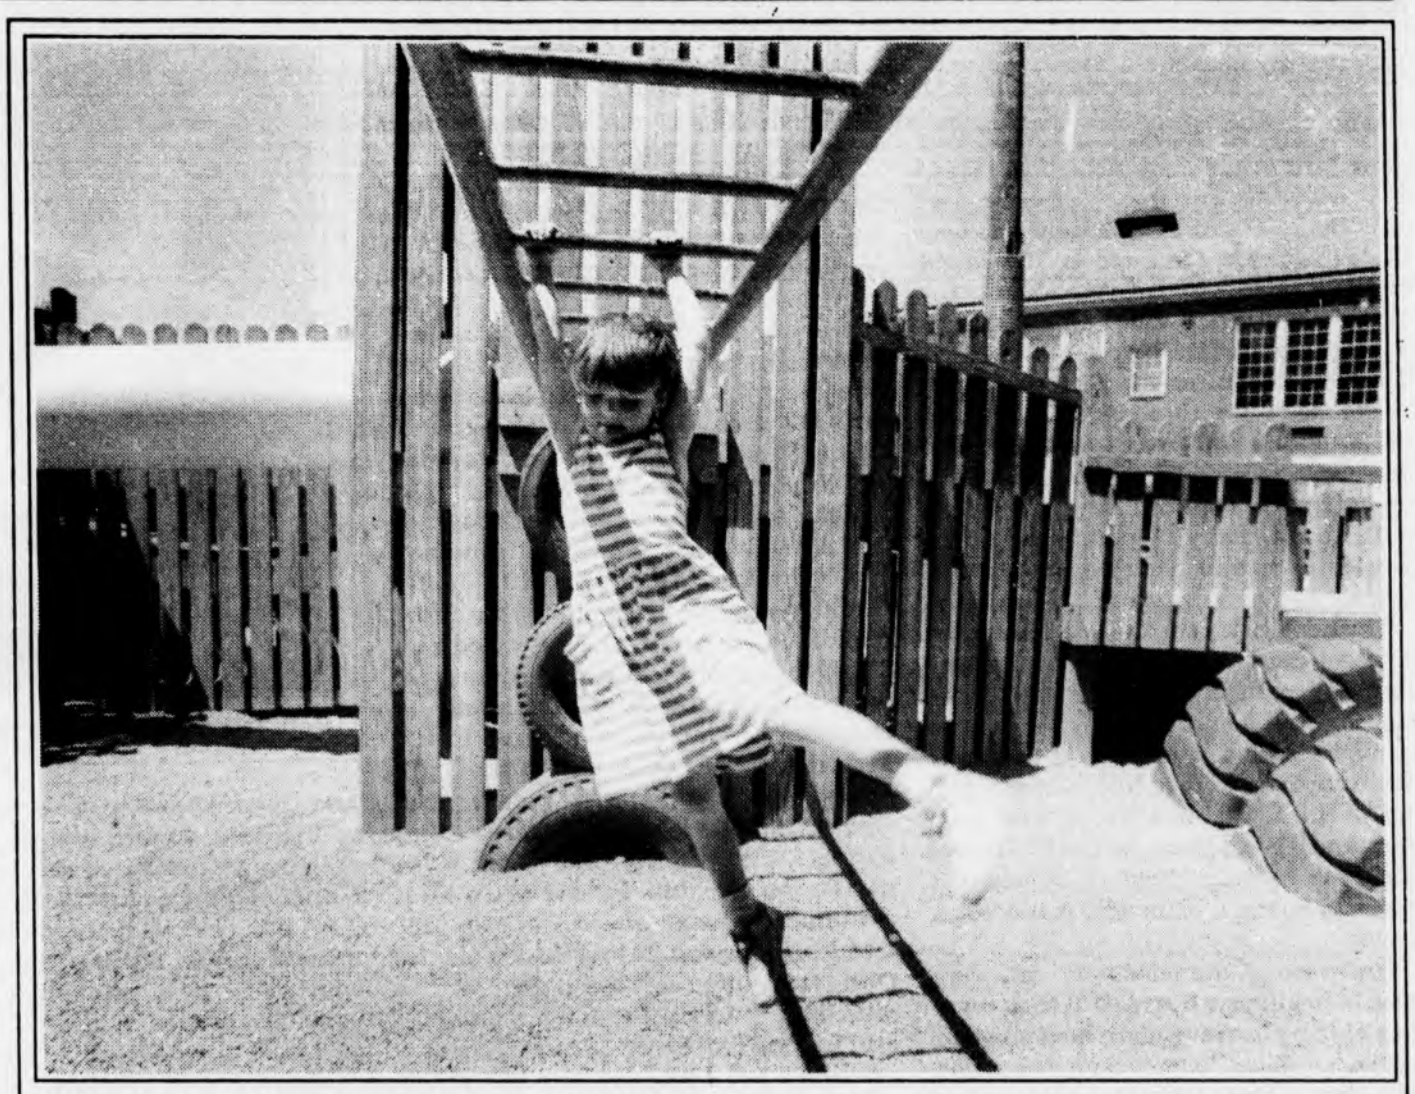
There were torpedoes, sparklers and ladyfingers for the timid; Roman candles, sky rockets and two-inch "Black Cats" for the daring; and, for the real men among us — cherry bombs!

The best way to shoot off a "Black Cat" — or, better yet, a cherry bomb — was to place it under an empty can, touch burning punk to the wick, then stand by and watch it fly. Any one of us could have told you that.

"Black Cats" could also be inserted in those climbing holes in telephone poles and whole chunks of the poles could be blown away. On July 5, our neighborhood looked like Baghdad after General Schwarzkopf had passed through.

And the cherry bombs? You could light them and hold them in your hand until the last minute and throw them into the air and watch them exploded in a flash and scare hell out of every dog within earshot.

What did it matter that every now and then a kid lost a finger or an eye to his own personal explosive. Kids also lost their lives diving into the quarries and jumping ice cakes on the river, too.



In the time and town where we grew up . . .

A week or so before the big day, town workers began collecting old railroad ties and other flammables and stacking them to the height of a three-story building in the park or one the beach.

Around nine or ten o'clock on the night of the Fourth, whole families gathered around and ooohed and aaahed while flames from the bonfire soared into the night, ending with the glowing ties crashing to the ground in a shower of sparks.

In the time and town where we grew up . . .

The produce section of the local grocery store sprouted great green mounds of watermelon with succulent pink insides and little black seeds that you could spit for distance.

Gillian Weber, 5, hangs out at the Osgood School playground as the recreation department summer program gets underway this week.

It seemed like every family in our neighborhood topped off the holiday dinner with a slice of watermelon at the dinner table or on the front porch. Thanksgiving had its turkey, Easter its baked ham but for the Fourth it was watermelon.

We don't do those things now in the town where we live.

You can get a year in jail and a $500 fine for shooting off a ladyfinger and we suppose that's progress and safety, at least for telephone poles, dogs and kids with five fingers.

Bonfires are becoming fewer and fewer, under fire (if you'll pardon the expression) from environmentalists, and we suppose that's good, too, because the air we breathe is obviously important to all of us.

Watermelon is still around but not in such large quantities because people don't seem to eat dinner in large family groups anymore and we know some sensitive souls who refuse to eat watermelon because of certain racial connotations.

We don't do those things now in the town where we live.

The barber chair in the forsythia bush

By Tanna Kasperowicz

Last week the TT building inspector sent a letter to the Milligans of 2 Linden Drive ordering them to remove an old barber chair from their property. According to the Milligans, the letter said if they didn't remove it by last Friday he'd remove it. Said it was junk.

The Milligans left Tinytown (for a visit) while all of this was in process, so I don't know what happened Friday. Figured if I went up there Friday and the chair wasn't there, I wouldn't know if the Milligans removed it or the TT building inspector removed it.

In any case, the Milligans claim that they had no sooner placed the barber chair in the forsythia bush last week when the TT building inspector arrived (like a bat out of hell). A little later a TT policeperson showed up - he also critiqued the chair as being junk, the Milligans said.

When I bounced this situation off my legal eagles they said "No way. They can't do a thing about it. If they remove the family's property they're in big trouble. They're (Tinytown) probably trying to scare them into removing it because it would never hold up in court, and they know it."

Know what? I don't want Tinytown utilizing my tax dollars in this manner. I don't want this to swell into another case where a government swollen with its own authority attempts to ride roughshod over the rights or liberties of anyone...however strange their lawn furniture. This is a civil matter involving neighbors and the barber chair in the forsythia is not the real issue (isn't it funny how it never is?).

Tinytown has this tiny zoning bylaw 4.3.3 which states that the open display of junk will be prohibited in all districts - but the Milligan family says the barber chair is not junk. The TT building inspector and a TT policeperson feel otherwise.

Is this the freedom for which men and women fought in the Persian Gulf? This is it, gang...as raw and naked as you'll ever see it. Your First Amendment rights guarantee you the right to put your barber chair in the forsythia bushes. And while I don't blame the Milligan's neighbor for not liking it there...I really don't want my Tinytown tax dollars to be utilized to solve civil matters between neighbors. This is exactly the kind of thing which has to be worked out between neighbors.

Years ago Tinytown spent several years and over $100,000 of TT citizens' tax dollars attempting to define a fence as a structure. After all was said and done the judge told Tinytown that, of course, a fence was not a structure. Wasn't that an expensive little semantics lesson? The real issue had nothing to do with the fence. The real issue is that one of the parties involved in the dispute had a chronic hypersensitivity; the breeze was bruising, the sun smarted, allergies ran rampant, and this person was quite honestly and chronically ill. There was no way Tinytown could make the world right for this person, but it sure tried.

The barber chair in question.

Accordingly, I've earmarked 4.3.3 of the zoning bylaws for demolition because it is anti-expression. There are times when everyone needs to put their barber chair in the forsythia bush.

Just a little aside, here. For years my neighbor and I had disputed after every hurricane over whether it was God's fault or Tanna's fault a limb had falled in my neighbor's yard. One day we had words over the fence and she filed a complaint with the TT police. One of the TT policepersons called me to tell me she had filed a complaint and I said: "Did she say I harmed her in any way?" No, he agreed she hadn't. "Then what right do you have to get involved in a civil matter?" I asked the TT policeperson, who agreed he had no right to get involved in a civil matter. And neither does Tinytown have the right to get involved in a civil matter.

Know your rights, use them, or prepare to lose them.

At last week's adjourned session of annual town meeting TT advisory chairman Arne Gjesteby asked for volunteers to serve on a panel which would advise on the feasibility of creating a public safety department

Selectperson Jane Goedecke said she would have counsel research the legality of advisors creating a panel to serve under advisors.

To not a little applause, Mr. Gjesteby said the selectpeople seemed to be doing nothing about trying to downsize the town's second largest department, and while the town had been waiting for leadership from the selectpersons on this matter..."They don't seem to be doing anything." Hence, the committee.

After six years on the advisory committee, Gjesteby will leave the committee sometime this summer (a town bylaw says advisors cannot serve more than two three-year terms). It's ironic that while some are still waiting for a "goodbye and thank you" resolution from the selectpeople (Dickie Barrow retired from the police department last fall); others (Arne Gjesteby) are awarded early and anxiously.

Heard a funny, funny statement on national public radio last week. While speaking about the large numbers of medical lawsuits and the high cost of medical insurance in this country, an Englishman said: "The trouble with Americans is that they think death's an option."

Mets wind up regular season in first place

By Joan Kovach

After enjoying a picnic and an All-Star game, the Mets and Athletics played their second game, reported on in part recently, in which the A's rally was held off by the Mets for their 10th straight win. All-Star Greg Taylor went the distance with six K's and was 2-2 at the plate. Taylor had the help of All-Stars Ely Kahn (2-3), Frank Abidie (2-3), Sam Goedecke (1-1 with a hard double) and J.L. Williams (1-1) and the double and single served up by Larry Adams. Sure-hit catches by Taylor Devin, All-Star, and Patrick Leahy helped. Met fielders gunned down four A's trying to get extra bases.

The next night, the League Champion Mets got caught looking past a hungry Cardinal team and saw their 10-game winning streak end. Brian Walsh hit two doubles. Daniel Steel was 1-2. Other Mets' hits came from Abidie, Taylor, Kahn and Devin. It was, however, a total team effort and a great game for the Red Birds, who have proven their skills when it comes to facing a team who is holding a streak.

On Tuesday, the Cardinals came very close to beginning a streak of their own. On a blazing hot afternoon they played a makeup against the awesome Sox and both teams went at it with ferocity at the bats. The Cards scored seven runs in the first inning, but the Sox caught up. Both teams hit well and a fifth-inning tie score kept these teams slugging it out until nearly 6 p.m. in a cliffhanger that ended in a defeat for the Cards by one run. Hitting for the Cardinals were Ted Goff (on base three times), Nate Cotter (2-4 with a walk), Steve Kovach (2-3), Al Schwerin with two triples, Steve Baker (on base four times with one hit), Lee Atherton with two walks and a double, and Slugger Payne, who went 3-5.

When the dust settled at Barnes Field, the Pirates and Athletics went to work carving more ruts along those baselines in a 10-7 skull and bones victory. Scott Van Hartesvelt had two doubles and a single for the Pirates. Paul Michael Quentin had a single and a two-RBI double in the top of the sixth with two outs to push the Pirates ahead, 8-7. Colton Ralston was hot at short, throwing out three runners at first and executing a pretty double play as well. Keith Jackson had a handy seven K's from the mound.

On Friday the 14th, with Justin Buckley on the mound for the entire game, the Dodgers took on the Red Sox. The Dodger's outfield played some great ball, with Bobby Stansill making an outstanding catch to save runs in the first inning. Matt Lewis and Burke Davis played well in the infield. Buckley and Greg Bilton had two hits apiece, and Jimmy O'Sullivan smashed a double, as did Tucker Gledhill. Rookie Mark Equi continues to dazzle at bat and got a hit, and Matt Lewis stole four bases for the Dodgers. Joey Magner threw his incredible pitches for nine strikeouts and batting for the Sox, Andy Hamilton produced two hits, and Justin Golden had himself a double.

In the last game of the regular season, the Dodgers returned to Barnes Field the next night to face the Cardinals, who, with only eight players, challenged the Dodgers with a Dave Noble 10-K pitching effort. Teddy Goff and Charlie Dean played well in the field and at the plate, with Goff getting on base four times and Dean claiming his first double of the season. Leigh Atherton led in solid bat contact, and Lloyd Workman had two good hits, including a double. Big Al Schwerin's patience got him three walks and pitcher Noble, who was just that, belted two good hits and went the distance at the mound. With Toppan and Workman working the entire outfield for the entire game unassisted, Charlie T. grabbed a sure hit with a nice catch. In an effort the Dodgers called "gallant," the Cards, scoring six runs, could not hold the robust Dodgers. Matt Lewis at the mound went the distance, assisted by Jeremy Williams, Greg Bilton and John Paul Lacks' excellent defensive work. At bat, the Dodger's Justin Buckley was three for three with two triples. Rookie Equi had two hits. Lewis, Gledhill, Davis and Lacks had hits, including a slam by John Paul that hit the top of the fence and bounced back onto the field.

And now a word about the coaches whose efforts gave us this wonderful Major League season. While it's true that some of them need baseball the way other people need coffee, the consistency, reliability and generosity of the coaches, who take good care of their own kids year round, and then give more of themselves to all Cohasset kids all through the baseball season, is a gift this town can treasure. They tend to equipment, schedules, scores and reporting, but most of all, they tend to the developing skills and dreams kids bring to them each April. Hats off to the coaches for a job well done! Good luck in the playoffs.

(Due to a holiday deadline change, and then a computer error, the Cards-Sox, Pirates-A's and A's-Cards games played the week of May 18 appeared late, in the June 13 Mariner.)

first ever appearance in goal for the Tigers.

Exhausted defensemen Charlie Shields and John Kinchla skated excellent double shifts until their replacement arrived, but the team was tottering. The offense was sputtering. Cohasset wingers failed to close the passing lanes within their own end, and they failed to aggressively pursue the puck along the boards and behind their net. To make matters worse, speedy left wing Pat Reynolds was then hobbled by an errant Hull player while taking a pass along the boards. Reynolds went down and later to the hospital. He'll be on the disabled list until the doctors declare him fit to play.

Midway through the first period, Hull found the range from the right side and blasted one by McKenna. Seconds later Cohasset found their range, then the Cohasset barrage began.

If imitation is the sincerest form of flattery, then Cohasset's Hockey Old Timers should feel complemented by the play of Leo's Hockey Tigers. Mike Reynolds wheeled Pompeo-style through Hull, scoring two goals with relative ease. Kevin Mulcahy blasted in a shot from 25 feet ala Steve Daley. Charlie Shields blocked shots with the patented "Curran" moves. Matt Kramers set up in the slot and scored on a smooth pass from Johnny Murphy in a play reminiscent of the Gallagher/Sandblom era. Mike Riley pinpointed a wrist shot over an outstretched Hull goalie in Ed Straughn fashion. Tim Conroy crashed the net for a goal as Bobby Morgan has done. Eleventh Grade Defenseman Johnny Kinchla swept up ice carrying the puck like Old Timer Bill Devine as the team spread out to take his pass. Obviously, this team has absorbed the style and technique of the Old Timers and you can see it in their play.

Other key players made similarly spectacular plays. Long striding ninth grade left wing, Brendan Kinchla made a diving backcheck on a Hull breakaway preventing what appeared to be "sure" Hull goal.

Super subs Matt Graves, and Anthony Wigmore combined with the younger Kinchla to give Cohasset an effective third line. They saw plenty of action. Senior Dan DeMichele has returned to the lineup. Dan skated with the passing phenom Charlie Endris and hardworking Mike Riley. This is a tough line to break in on because the puck is always on the move.

So despite Friday's 100 degree heat and assorted other personnel problems, Leo's Hockey Tigers could not be deterred from their mission. The Tigers were determined to beat Hull convincingly, and they did.

Chris McKenna required help getting into the team's goalie equipment (McKenna has never played the position) but once he got on the ice, he played like a veteran. His acrobatic performance belied his inexperience. As the team's right wing on the Pat Reynolds line, McKenna's future value as a wing and goalie is considerable.

Sailors find National competition smooth

By Peter Kasperowicz

Cohasset High's sailing team has been knocking the wind out of the competition lately. Their 11-0 season was rewarded with an invitation to this year's national tournament, held May 18-19 at the Connecticut Coast Guard Academy.

The Skippers placed eighth out of 12 teams – not bad for the only invited public school.

"We don't even hold practices," said coach Mary Lee Murphy, admitting that the team's talent comes mostly from the students themselves.

"As far as I'm concerned, I'm a parent on the water with them. An adult has to be there. These kids know how to sail from the Sailing Club and the Yacht Club," Murphy said.

Murphy's daughter, Kerry, is more than pleased with the team's eighth-place showing.

"Teams from Florida, Michigan and everywhere else were there," Kerry said. "The competition was very good. Most of the teams there owned their own boats, like Taber Academy."

Cohasset had a brief rest after the nationals and entered the state finals on May 30-31 after holding first place in the Mass Bay League. Kerry and her brother, John, skippered Cohasset's two state entries and took second place behind Belmont Hill. Belmont Hill stayed one step ahead of Cohasset in the nationals as well, coming in seventh to Cohasset's eighth.

John Murphy, now a senior, predicts a long line of successful seasons, citing the team's youth and experience: "When all these freshmen are seniors, they'll be really good."

The team is losing Kerry Murphy and Steve Almeida to graduation; Murphy will attend Stonehill in the fall and hopefully race 110's in Hull, and Almeida has already started school at Georgia Tech where he hopes to be sailing soon.

Signs of upcoming talent are already evident. Tim Herzog won the June 5 Mass Bay undergraduate regatta in the sophomore division. "The undergraduate race is nice because sometimes the seniors race all year," coach Murphy said.

Next year's team will also include Stacy and Matt Pierce, Chip Kennedy, Joe Menis, Dave Christoffer, Amanda Rossi, Hillary Strong, Nicole Peterson, Chuck Shields and any other prodigy they can find hanging around the harbor.

Flying Scot results

Choppy seas and 20 mph winds were favorable to Gordon Hislop and crew Larry Mitchell as they took first place despite a disabled spinnaker. Hislop was the leader of the pack from the first mark to the end of the race.

Ray Kasperowicz and crew Bob Davenport held onto second, followed by Bob Jackson with his son Rob.

George Wey and Kasperowicz are now tied for first place after the Scot's ninth race. Steve Bartow and John Brister are in third and Pete Goedecke holds onto fourth.

The fleet estimates that Hunta the Protestor owes the next tack party fifteen molded salads.

Great year for Yankees

The undefeated (14-0) Cohasset Pony League Baseball Yankees (Ages 13 to 15) are about to conclude a storybook season.

The Yankees under veteran Pony and Little League Coach John Rolandelli, have waited a long time for this day. Rolandelli's team is two games away from an undefeated season and the Scituate/Cohasset Pony League Championship.

Rolandelli, who has coached baseball in the Cohasset Pony and Little League program for 10 years, has had many successful teams. He coached the Cohasset Little League All-Stars to two first-place tournament victories in the prestigious North River Tournament. The North River Tournament has All Star teams from 20 southeastern Massachusetts communities competing for the trophy. The Pony League Championship, though, could be his last Little League hurrah.

This year's Yankee team reflects John's temperament on the field. The boys are quiet, purposeful, determined. There is a good mix of talent, youth and experience. Team leaders are the veteran battery of Chris Rolandelli and Chris Kondrat. Brothers abound on this team. McKennas (Chris and Kevin), Stevens (Chris and Greg), Rileys (Brian and Mike) and the Kondrats (Jamie and Chris). Other outstanding players on this year's team include Brian Patterson, Brendan Kinchla, Jason Crossman, Scott Theriault, Brian Sasso and Andy Kamatoris and Matt Conley.

With this year's championship, John's son, Chris, will conclude his eligibility. John's wife, Barbara, the team's number one fan, will probably help pack up the equipment, check to make sure all the boys have a ride home, and then drive off. Cohasset Little League Baseball may never be the same.

Hats off to the Yankees!!!

Bill Walsh, Ned Thompson and Andrew Rossi are outside the sailing club's building at Government Island after being certified as instructors.

Sailing Club senior instructors win certification

Senior instructors at the Cohasset Sailing Club recently passed the four-day Sailing Instructor Certification Course of the United States Yacht Racing Union, held June 13 to 16 at Eastern Point Yacht Club in Gloucester.

To qualify for the course they first had to obtain certification in Red Cross Standard First Aid and Adult CPR.

Volunteers champion Little League play

By John M. Smoot
Cohasset Little League President

"This field was built out of love." Less than two months ago former Red Sox announcer Ken Coleman said those words at Cohasset Little League's Opening Day Ceremony. Coleman went on to tell the kids that their parents were there because they love them.

The volunteers who built Barnes Field 40 years ago gave their time, their talent, and their resources to organize and maintain a very special program of youth baseball. Countless volunteers have followed and as a result of their efforts, kids now spread around the country still have vivid memories of their moments spent playing ball at Barnes – kids who learned from baseball about friendship, teamwork, persistence, and how to cope with success and with failure, kids who dreamt about the next time at bat, the next game, the next season, kids who simply loved to play ball.

Cohasset Little League 1991 says thank you to all of you who worked so hard and gave so much to carry on the tradition by making this season special for so many kids. Team sponsors, town employees, school officials, coaches, parents, and many other individuals and organizations make Little League work. THANK YOU!

Many of you stuck around after the opening day ceremony and saw Joey Magner pitch the first game of the season. More accurately, you saw him throw and then heard the pop of the ball hitting the catcher's mitt. Last Sunday, Joey pitched the Red Sox to the Cohasset Little League championship. But it is what he did in between that means the most and makes the volunteering so worthwhile.

He gave 65 other kids a means by which they could test their spirit, gradually develop their confidence, and overcome their fears. Some will never forget getting their first hit off of Joey Magner. Some never experienced that joy. But all learned about perseverance. You would have to be blind not to have seen the character development that took place over the course of a season just because Joey Magner pitched.

Joey Magner tries to worry Ben Smoot at first base.

His story is only one among the 347 stories attached to each child who played Little League baseball in Cohasset this year. Each night, on fields around Cohasset, children were growing up, a little bit at a time. Parents suffered with them when they failed and shared their joy when they succeeded. As Teddy Roosevelt said, "Far better it is to dare mighty things...even though checkered by failure, than to take rank with those poor spirits who neither enjoy much nor suffer much, because they live in the gray twilight that knows not victory or defeat."

Thanks to all of you who gave the kids an opportunity "to dare mighty things. "

Farm League news . . .

Submitted by John Kinchla

The Farm League Baseball season has concluded. This year, the Cohasset Little League had over 110 players in the program's 6 and 7 year old Farm division.

The following are the Farm League coaches who made this Farm League season successful:

FARM LEAGUE PROFILE

CARDINALS

The Cardinals, in their distinctive maroon hats and shirts, traded runs with the CYAA Astros in their last season game. Big performers for the Cardinals, Troy Canistraro, Ian Kidder, Bobby Lehr and Matt Davis. Jared Krupczak charged after every ball, while ever alert Ross Lappen backed-up his infielders throughout the game. Patrick Carbone, Kara Gaughen and Ted Gledhill had plenty of action as the Astros sprayed the ball to all fields throughout this contest.

Dean Grinnell and Ted Thompson impressed with their bats, arms and fielding range. This duo made many key plays throughout the contest. The Cardinals can boast about their base-running speed and power. This is a well balanced club with excellent veteran coaches in Mark Cannistraro and Ralph Kidder. These boys can really churn up the base paths stretching singles into doubles and making life miserable for their opponents. This is a good ball club.

GIANTS

Many Farm Leaguers found out that the Giants were a fearsome team. Consider that the Giants were coached by an electrifying management team of Paul Bilodeau, Jim French and Art Roach, then consider the talent in this club. The Giants certainly had the talent to send shock waves through the league and they did.

Giant strongmen, Tommy Bilodeau, Jimmy French and Jody Roach drove the ball deep on many occasions during the season. Andrew Walsh and Stephen Ashley have big league gloves. Martha Wasp and Ryan Stevens create havoc for the opposition with their base-running ability, while the Camacho's, Robert and Kim, banged the ball with power against the opposition. John Strong and Adam Sorrentino stopped everything hit their way. This Giant team sent shivers through the league all season.

THE A'S

Like their big league counterparts, the Farm League A's coached by Farm League veterans Peter Berg and Dick Avery have a commanding presence on the field and potent bats at the plate.

Defensively, Jasmine Ashar, Justin Baker and Katie Ainslie can turn a quick double play from their positions of short stop, second and first, while David Buck holds down the "hot corner" at third base.

These young A's like their major league namesakes also have a powerful corps of outfielders. Leading the lineup is Mike Calorio, Seth Cutler and Charles Anderson. Future stars on the team are the bash brothers, Conor Avery, Tim Baird and Alexander Berg.

VERMONT'S STATEHOOD BICENTENNIAL

Vermont Chamber of Commerce Travel Division

In this, our Bicentennial Year, visiting "Vermonters" - current and former, original or adopted, real or imagined - will join in a year-long celebration of our 200 years of statehood.

They will discover a state where tradition endures and history lives on and occasionally repeats itself in rewarding ways.

Every month of 1991 will see Bicentennial events around Vermont. More than 200 are scheduled, most occurring from July to October. They are listed along with hundreds of other activities in seasonal events calendars available from the Vermont Travel Division and at information centers.

Historic sites and museums are poised to celebrate our rural and community traditions this year. Visitors will find modern transportation systems and world class vacation accommodations and amenities waiting to help them be part of this once-in-a-century experience.

BICENTENNIAL HIGHLIGHTS

Vermont Statehood: The First 25 Years and Their Echos Today- New scholarship and a wealth of artifacts reapprise our views about the early years of statehood and the critical issues of the times: rapid population growth, economic boom, land speculation, use of natural resources, and relations with Abenaki Indians. Year round, open daily. The Vermont Museum, Pavilion Building, 109 State Street, Montpelier, VT 05602. Tel. 802-828-2291.

Shelburne Museums's- Vermont 200 features fine, decorative and folk art objects made or used in Vermont. These specially identified and interpreted items are displayed throughout the museum as part of the regular admission. Open daily May18-October 20. Shelburne, VT 05482. Tel. 802-985-3346

Vermont Bicentennial Heritage Journey- Wagon and horseback caravan will travel from Pownal to Newport, the length of the state, from June 25 to July 12. Horse or wagon owners may join the caravan for a modest fee: packages are available for day rides, several nights or the entire journey. For info: Bethany Kosmider, P.O. Box 266, Richmond, VT 05477.

Old Home Days- Communities throughout the state will be holding local bicentennial celebrations during the summer and fall. Many of these will be during the statewide Homecoming Week August 11-18.

State Bicentennial Celebration- August 17, Statehouse Lawn, Montpelier. Day long and evening performances and concerts, including an Official Bicentennial Band concert, dance and fireworks.

Brattleboro Parade- September 22. Vermont's biggest bicentennial parade will feature 14 divisions representing each of the thirteen original states and Vermont, as well as Vermont's 14 counties. As many as 28 marching bands will accompany floats from across the state along the 2.5 mile parade route. For information: John Turner, P.O. Box 2025, West Brattleboro, VT 05301. Tel. 802-254-9572.

The 33 foot Shallop was the only boat the Pilgrims had for exploration and fishing after the Mayflower sailed back to England in 1621. There is written record that Christopher Jones, Master of Mayflower and namesake of the Jones River, piloted the Shallop up this river 370 years ago.

John Thomas and Emerson, are a feature story in the magazine Your Family. As most of you know, they have an extremely successful business, E-I-E-I-O, wonderful children's clothing that Karen designs. The article tells all about their factory in New Bedford, and all of the ups and downs involved in having a line of clothing. It included a nice picture of Jack helping out at the factory, and the whole story is great. And, Karen is prettier than ever, if that's possible. A true success story.

❑ Football fans, take note! Be sure to congratulate Ray Jones the next time you see him! Ray, just back from Offense-Defense Football Camp in Long Island, won the Best Halfback award. There were 250 players in his division! Ray has been a METCO student in the Cohasset schools since kindergarten, what a great thing for us! You should be pleased and proud of your football prowess Ray, we all are!

That's the news for this week, please let us know what is going on in your family.

Fireworks explode in dazzling success

By Peter Kasperowicz
Mariner correspondent

Boston's fireworks had a little competition this year from Peter and Susan Roy, 49 Margin St., who treated Cohasset to a dazzling light show last Thursday night.

"We couldn't publicize it, but we knew people knew about it," said Mrs. Roy. By the time the sun went down, hundreds of people had the harbor surrounded. Many others had camped out on Bassing's Beach to ensure front row seating.

The family hired Rockingham Fireworks of New Hampshire to run the show. "We had seen them do a show at Loon Mountain and Peter was very impressed. He knew just which fireworks he wanted to bring to Cohasset," Roy said.

The Roy's give credit to the many people who helped make the night a success. Aside from a town permit, they also needed permission to move nearby boats at least 300 feet away from the launching site.

"Harbor Master Irving Gadow moved a lot of boats for us," said Mr. Roy. "And the fire department really helped out in supervising the whole night."

The fireworks were stationed at the Bellarmine House, just past the yacht club. Many of the heavy shells had to be buried deep in the lawn to keep them stable.

"They were very gracious to us. It's not everyday someone asks, 'Can we bring a backhoe into your property and dig a huge trench?' They let us dig, and we made sure everything was put back in place when it was over," said Mrs. Roy, who estimated that over 1,000 shells were used in the half-hour show.

Plans for next year are up in the air. "We've had so many nice letters, but we have to take this one year at a time," Roy said. If Peter, Christopher and Kyle Roy have any say in the matter, next year might be dangerous.

"The boys were excited all week, and they just loved it."

Spotting problems at Cohasset Heights Landfill

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

Will there be a spotter at the Cohasset Heights Landfill, CHL?

Back in 1986, the state decision for site assignment set a spotter as one of the conditions of the operation of the private landfill.

This week the board of health turned the matter over to town counsel Richard Henderson for action after an ongoing dialogue to CHL owner Paul Barry came to an impasse.

Residents have complained in the past about trucks bringing trash to the landfill. There were questions about the types of trash brought to CHL

There had been some talk last month about CHL providing a video camera at the gate. The camera would be motion sensitive to provide information about the times trucks are allowed into the facility. It would be set to check to see that the trucks are weighed.

The conditions of operation allow only a certain amount of trash to be accepted each day.

Sharon Becker, member of the board of health, said the spotter issue will come up again at the next meeting set for Aug. 17 at town hall.

She explained that town counsel has been asked how to approach the spotter issue.

She also pointed out that there are four legal cases pending between the town and CHL. In some the town is the plaintiff. In others, the defendant.

The cases have been pending for years.

A public hearing on CHL was convened by the board of health in 1987. It has been continued and never closed. Becker said the board is looking into the status of the hearing so it can be completed.

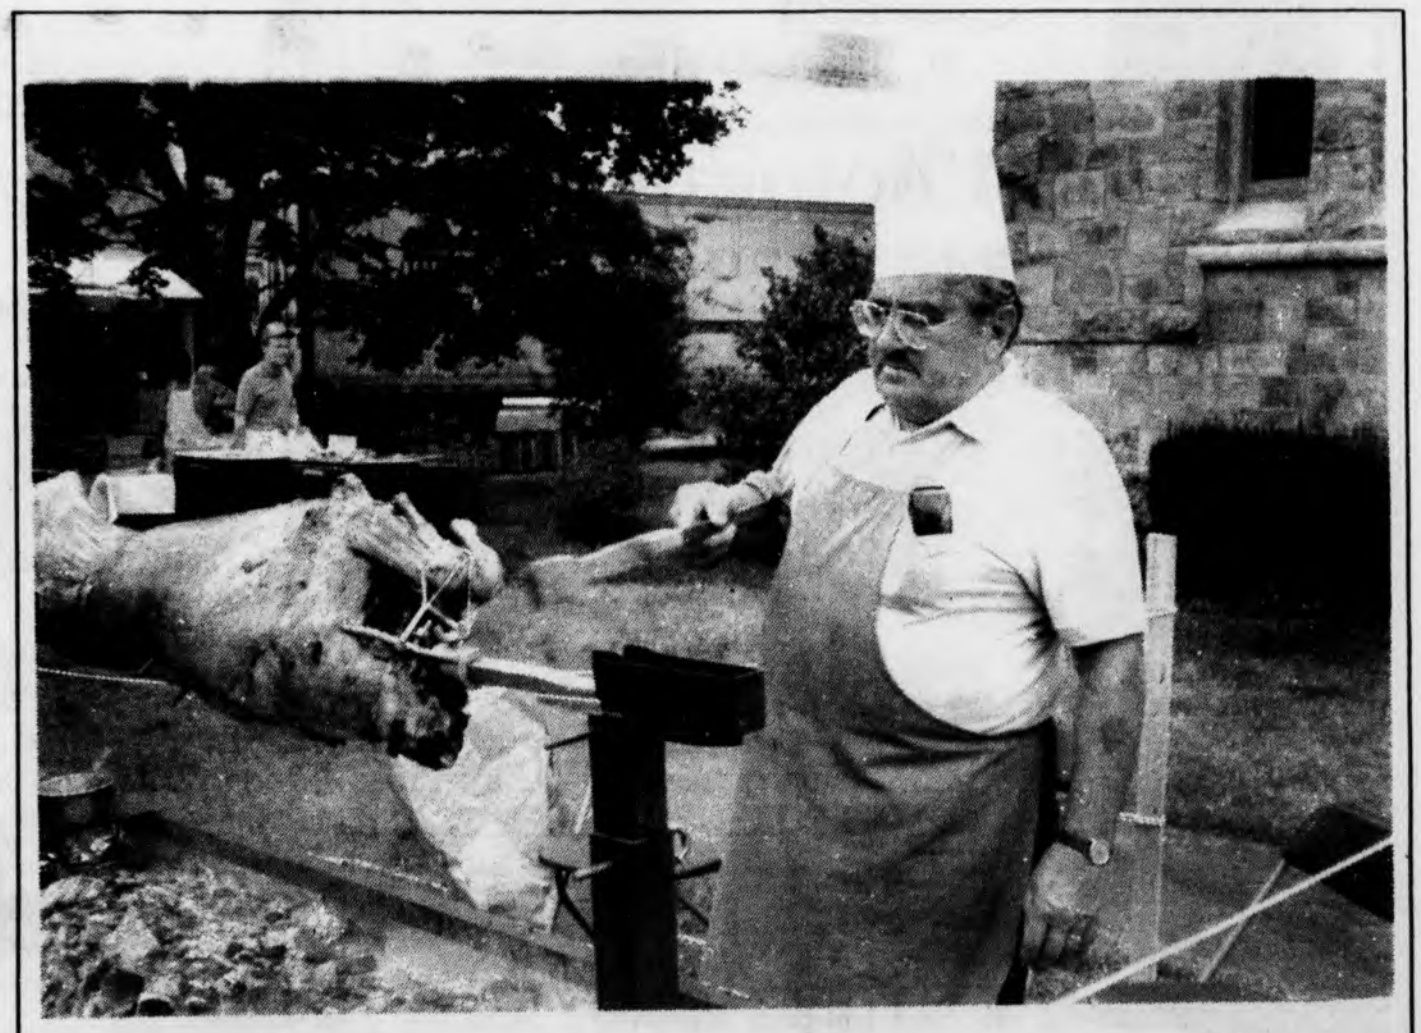
"There are new rules. For instance, now you need to have a hearings officer. We aren't sure whether the new rules apply to a continued hearing," she said.

While the spotter has been a condition since 1986, there have been times when the town was willing to accept Paul Barry as the spotter.

Residents have complained about that designation.

At other times, the board of health's agent, Dr. Joseph Godzik, served as the parttime spotter. Becker has also done some spotting in the past.

"But then we realized that a landfill in East Bridgewater (owned by BFI) pays to have a spotter," Becker said.



The board of health is now interested in having CHL pay to have a spotter check monitor the trash. CHL is allowed to accept demolition materials only.

The spotter issue is not connected to plans by CHL to expand the dump.

Right now the state is considering a plan to double the size of the landfill by adding 27.5 acres to the site, off Route 3A. The expansion plans seek permission to accept general refuse. Barry has stated that with the recession the construction industry has slowed its work, limiting the amount of trash sent to CHL.

Arts projects approved

The Massachusetts Cultural Council has approved six of the seven Arts Lottery Grant proposals for arts projects recommended for funding by the Cohasset Arts Lottery Council at its regular semiannual meeting on April 11 in the Cohasset Town Hall.

Of the projects recommended by the local council, only Cohasset High School Alternative School's Monomoy Surfboat Restoration Project was rejected by the state council, which cited a lack of arts or humanities content as the reason.

The following projects were given funding by the council:

• The Light Magic Theater, a multimedia production staged by young adults with special needs in collaboration with local artists, technicians, and educators, sponsored by the South Shore Association for Retarded Citizens ($100).

• The 36th Annual South Shore Art Center Festival, which took place in Cohasset from June 21 through 23 sponsored by the South Shore Art Center ($200).

• Music by Mozart, a multimedia presentation and enactment of Mozart's words and music performed by Dennis Kobray, supporting a K-6/special needs unit in music and art in the local schools, sponsored by the Cohasset Parent Student Organization ($200).

• Contribution towards performing arts scholarships for Matt Silvia and Casey Smith of the Cohasset High School Class of 1990, sponsored by the Cohasset Arts Boosters Club ($100, carried over from the fall 1990 funding cycle).

• A contribution towards the continuing operation of Folio, a free regional arts magazine published four times per year ($100).

Straits Pond lies peacefully behind the trees. So far this year the flying pests have been under control.

• A contribution towards replacement of supplies and materials used by the Town of Cohasset's Recreation Commission in their Summer Playground Program arts and crafts classes for children ($46).

• Funding for tickets to Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet" at the Publick Theatre for Cohasset High School students, under the Performing Arts Studies Series (PASS) program ($150).

Funding available for all arts lottery grant proposals submitted totalled $946. The $200 committed to the Monomoy Surfboat project will be carried over to the fall 1991 funding cycle and added to funds available then, if any. Since $294 was available under the PASS program and the application approved was the only one received, $144 will be carried over.

Application forms for the fall funding cycle are now available at the Selectmen's office in Town Hall or by mail from council Chairman James Morrison, P.O. Box 100, Cohasset 02025. For more information call Morrison at 383-9042.

Arts lottery funds are awarded to individuals or organizations dedicated to the arts and humanities. Grants may be awarded also to nonprofit, tax-exempt organizations or public agencies whose purpose does not include the arts if they embark on an arts activity.

Local aid still flies in the air

The local aid story, so far reported, looks about as bleak as the advisory board expected.

Arne Gjesteby, chairman of the advisory board, said the numbers are within the range his committee worked with in preparing this year's budget.

Gjesteby said the difference seems to be about $34,000 less than the projected aid.

Figures, however, are in a state of flux.

The advisory board will be meeting at town hall Thursday, July 11, to act on several transfer requests and to sort out the numbers.

The numbers do not become firm until the state releases the "cherry sheets," so-called because they were once printed on cherry colored paper.

Assessments must be included to balance the aid figures. This year the town is being hit by the MBTA, which historically had dropped the assessment due to lack of local service.

SAFE starts letter-writing campaign

SAFE (Stop Any Further Expansion) has initiated a letter-writing campaign to Environmental Affairs Secretary Susan Tierney to oppose expansion of the Cohasset Heights Landfill.

"Cohasset residents need to send a message to Environmental Affairs Secretary Susan Tierney," said Alix White, President of SAFE. "We need to tell Tierney that the residents of Cohasset, because of many serious environmental concerns and the threat it poses to Lily Pond, strongly oppose siting an MWRA dump, or a solid waste dump, at the Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL)," said White.

"We have been informed by the State Sludge Siting Commission that, while the town meeting vote opposing accepting a MWRA dump is very significant, the vote itself does not drop Cohasset from their list. Also, CHL is still seeking a solid waste expansion."

"We urge every Cohasset resident to write to Secretary Tierney (EOEA, Room 2000, 100 Cambridge Street, Boston 02202), and to send this letter soon," said White. Tierney, said White, is the Chairman of the Sludge Siting Commission.

"Tierney needs to hear from every Cohasset resident that the CHL landfill site is unsuitable for an MWRA dump, or for a solid waste dump, because of the threat to Lily Pond," she said.

"The fight against MWRA sludge is not yet over, and will not be over until the state Sludge Siting Commission issues its report on August 1," said White.

"Cards and letters will help us win this fight," White said. "Your voice will be heard."

Maureen Healy leaves police department

After 12 years on the Cohasset police department, the town's first female officer has "retired."

While Patrolman Maureen Healy was not actually ready for retirement, she was vested in the retirement system, according to police officials.

The town hired its second female police officer this past year.

Police Chief Joseph Kealy said he was sorry to see Officer Healy leave.

Last month selectmen voted against granting her a leave of absence.

Healy submitted a one-line letter of resignation effective June 18, the date her vacation ended.

The chief pointed out that other requests for leaves of absence have been refused if the town employee requested the leave to try out other employment.

Officer Healy, who lived in Scituate, could not be reached for comment.

Sources within the police department said she has moved out of state.

Before being appointed a patrolman, she worked for the Scituate police as a civilian dispatcher.

Habitat loses $1 Bates Building sale

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

The Bates Building will not be sold to an affordable housing group for $1.

At town meeting on June 26, residents agreed with the advisory committee that the building was too valuable to give away.

Michael Keneally, a spokesman for Habitat for Humanity, spoke on the behalf of the sale of the building to his group.

He said the sale of the building would not only create much-needed affordable housing, it would get the property back on the tax rolls.

He said Habitat, a non-profit organization would renovate the building into two units of affordable housing.

Arne Gjesteby, the chairman of the advisory board, spoke out against giving the building away.

"It is not the time to give away our town property, he said, citing the town's tight financial constraints.

"We are not giving our employees raises this year," he said. "Charity is great, but this is not the time to give away property.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle said he could appreciate Habitat's intentions, but also questioned whether the town should give away a building valued at more than $175,000.

"To own a home is the American dream and it is wonderful," he said. "Sure we want to help, but we will help our own."

Laugelle said he was disappointed that Cohasset did not get local preference for Habitat's housing project, until after the project seemed in jeopardy.

He said it would be "shortsighted" to give away the building until it was a last resort.

Resident Linda Henderson questioned why town officials decided that the Bates Building was so valuable, when they were close to giving away the Government Island duplex.

Fred Koed of the Cohasset Housing authority said changing state regulations could force Cohasset to have more available affordable housing.

He said the sale of the building for $1 would not be a give-away, but an "investment."

Despite pleas from the project's proponents, town meeting went along with the non-binding resolution offered by the advisory committee not to give the building away.

• Jocelyn Kennedy Nolan celebrated her 30th birthday Saturday, June 29 at her parents' home at 41 Stevens Lane. Classmates from High School, college days and Ski Country were present to wish her a Happy 30th. Her dad cooked his famous Mexican brunch in 100 degree temperatures. Linda Kucera, a family friend, made her famous Chocolate Cake Supreme. Cards and gifts were enjoyed by all. Susan Pottenger and Lauren McNolan were high school day buddies, Pam Easley and Kerri DelaLusso were college friends, others were from ski country. The youngest guest present was Gram Kennedy.

• Doris Flaint celebrated her birthday in grand style last weekend, thanks to her daughters, Donna, Pam and Sandra.

Brian Donovan and Nicole Ferrara at the CHS senior prom not too long ago.

They threw her a real bash, and all of her friends had a wonderful time. It was reported that the food was super, the company great, and the party scene, Doris' house, never looked prettier. Happy belated birthday greetings to you Doris, and here's to many more.

• More great news from Ellery Clark, this time from Syracuse, New York. There were 4,110 competitors in the third Annual National Senior Sports Classic. Ellery received a purple ribbon for placing sixth in the 1,500 meters race walk and on Monday the bronze medal for the five kilometer race walk. Ellery was thrilled of course, and he also got some news that we can all be proud of. Ellery will appear on Channel ESPN in October when they are going to have a special hour program on the meet, discussing the spirit of competition, sportsmanship and amateurism, which was recorded during the events at the Syracuse National broadcast. We hope that Ellery will let us know the date as the time gets nearer, it should be fun to watch.

• Everyone is still talking about the wonderful fireworks display put on by the Roy family (Peter and Susan) on the Fourth of July. It sure was spectacular, and people from everywhere came to appreciate the spectacle. On behalf of the town, thank you for making a great Fourth of July a grand one.

• If you have spotted Peter and Joan (Edmonds) Lawrence around town, it's for a super reason. On July 4th it was Adele and Leonard Lawrence's 50th wedding anniversary, and they were here to celebrate it. Paul and his brother Peter (who lives in Duxbury) held a surprise dinner at the Barker Tavern, with their relatives coming from as far as Florida for the event. A fine time was had by all, you really can't miss at the Barker. Paul and Joan had another reason to celebrate while they were here, their 23rd wedding anniversary. They spent the day sailing with Paul's brother, Peter, and all had a great time.

• Happy birthday goes to Allison Ludlow, who will be celebrating the event with the family and friends at their summer place down the Cape. Have a great day Allison, and may this day be the beginning of a great year for you.

• James Patrick Walsh, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph F. Walsh Jr., who graduated from Cohasset High School in 1987, received his A.B. magna cum laude from Harvard University on June 6. He was preceded at Harvard by two brothers, Joseph and Robert (Robert received an M.A. and PhD from Harvard) who also graduated magna cum laude. In addition Mr. Walsh, who ranked in the top 10 percent of his Harvard Class, was graduated Phi Beta Kappa. He has enrolled at Duke University Law School for the fall semester. Mr. Walsh is especially grateful to the teachers in the Cohasset School system, who he feels gave him an excellent preparation for his college years, and he would publicly like to thank them. By the way, the Walshes are really a Harvard family; Patricia Anne Walsh received an A.B. from Harvard, Joseph F. Walsh, Jr. received a B.S. and M.A. degree from Harvard. Count 'em folks, that is eight degrees from the Walsh's immediate family, and many various courses. WOW.

• Any question you may have about the children population in Cohasset will be answered if you go by the Osgood School any weekday and see the program the Recreation Department is running. There are so many children there, and they all look like they are having a wonderful time. They love it. It is really fun to watch them.

Films seek waterfront locations

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

The South Shore's scenic charm will grace the silver screen in two movies currently in production.

"Housesitter," a romantic comedy starring Steve Martin and Meg Ryan will be filming in Cohasset for at least four days in late August, according to Michael Williams, a location scout for the Massachusetts Film Bureau.

"Primary Motives" a political thriller starring Justine ("Family Ties") Bateman, Judd ("The Breakfast Club") Nelson, and Malachi Throne also set up shop on the South Shore, briefly filming in Marshfield in late June.

The town of Marshfield may have had the toughest acting assignment in "Primary Motives;" it will try to pass itself off as Chatham.

The film, directed by Dan Adams, is being produced by Invisible Productions, an independent film company out of Luxemborg.

Following a one-day shoot on Green Harbor, the crew headed into Boston to shoot several scenes at the State House.

According to Spence Waugh, the location manager for the film, Marshfield was chosen over Gloucester, Scituate and Cohasset "because it is so quaint" and has a "beautiful little harbor.

"Housesitter's" was originally more ambitious in its local plans but has been scaled down.

Williams said the film, produced by Imagine Pictures, company is now targeting the week of August 18 for the shoot.

As part of a deal worked out with Cohasset selectmen, the production company will pay the town $5,000 for permission to film in town.

In addition to the cash offering, the town will also get to keep several trees the producers plan to plant in the downtown area.

Williams said the film originally considered building the house that will serve as its main set in Cohasset, but technical limitations forced a change of plan. The land selected was near the water and subject to conservation restrictions.

Reportedly the house may now be built in Concord.

He said the town and local businesses have been "very helpful" during the scouting process, offering suggestions that were appreciated by the crew.

The film crew is still looking at several Cohasset locations for inclusion in the movie, including an empty storefront to be set up as a grocery store, he said.

Williams said the company has been negotiating the possible use of Cohasset Hardware in downtown Cohasset and the Red Lion Inn for both interior and exterior scenes.

Williams said he will meet with director Frank Oz (better known as the voice of Miss Piggy) over the next few weeks to pin down the details of the shoot.

Rabies is a threat

The State Department of Public Health announced that an outbreak of wildlife rabies among raccoons may reach Massachusetts this year.

This outbreak, which began in the mid-Atlantic states several years ago, was reported in Connecticut in early April when two raccoons were found to be infected. This is the first time the outbreak has extended this far north and east.

Since it is possible that the outbreak may continue to spread, it is important that several steps be taken to minimize the risk of rabies among our domestic animals, and consequently, people.

All domestic animals, particularly dogs and cats, should be immunized against rabies. By law, dogs must be vaccinated. Cats are hunters by nature and often come in contact with animals at high risk for rabies. In fact, more rabid cats then dogs are now identified each year in the U.S. Domestic animals serve as the bridge between wildlife rabies and people. Protecting our pets and livestock is a major step toward protecting our communities.

People should avoid wild, stray or unfamiliar animals. They should not handle sick, injured or dead animals. Raccoon populations have become dependant on humans and therefore, large numbers of these wild animals are living close to people. We should provide raccoons as little food as possible. Keep all garbage cans securely closed, and clean up any garbage promptly. Raccoons are scavengers and can feed off of all sorts of trash.

Anyone bitten by an unfamiliar animal should immediately wash the wound with soap and water. Then call your doctor or local board of health for assistance in deciding if you need to be treated for rabies. Follow their instructions. There is a vaccine. Six doses are given over one month's time.

Cove dredging seems explosive

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

Kimball's By the Sea is listed on the record as opposing the town's plan to dredge Cohasset Cove in the fall.

But the new general manager of the company, Jane McCombs, has yet to be informed.

The statement of opposition was filed with the state Department of Environmental Protection by John DeRugeris, an engineer with Coast Line Engineering of Mattapoisett.

DeRugeris stated he was an agent for Kimball's By the Sea. He said that more information was needed about the effect of plans to remove two rock outcroppings that are located about 50 to 80 feet from Kimball's seawall. The current plan calls for blasting to remove the rocks.

The dredging, already approved by town meeting, would involve state funding.

Work would be accomplished sometime between Nov. 1 and Feb. 15.

Veterans' benefits for Desert Storm

Governor William Weld signed into law Sunday legislation that grants state veterans' benefits to Massachusetts troops who participated in Operation Desert Storm or the Panama Defense Intervention Force.

Weld also signed legislation that extends tuition, licensing, and other benefits to members of the National Guard or Reserves who were activated during Operation Desert Shield/Storm.

Weld signed the legislation during the "Stand Tall for America" celebration in Taunton, the Commonwealth's homecoming for Operation Desert Storm troops.

H. 5498, originally filed by Senate President William Bulger and House Speaker Charles Flaherty, extends the definition of "wartime services" to the more than 8,000 Massachusetts troops who saw active duty during Operation Desert Storm, as well as to the Massachusetts troops who received campaign medals for service during the Panama military action.

H. 5876, originally filed by Gov. Weld and Lt. Gov. Cellucci, allows public higher education students who were activated during Operation Desert Storm to make up missed terms without any academic or financial penalty or to receive a tuition refund.

The measure also extends by three months any deadlines for returning troops to renew professional or occupational licenses and allows activated public employees to retain their health insurance coverage under pre-existing premium ratios.

Insurance settlement

The town recently received a check for $28,600.43 from Cigna Insurance Company for contamination at the high school that happened back in October, 1990.

Cigna was representing Joseph DeVito Inc.

Reconstruction

The Historic District Commission issued permission June 29 to Jane and Edward Fegrey of 25 North Main Street for construction of a two-story garage in place of an existing one.

The permission was granted after a hearing.

In a separate matter, the commission gave Constance and Nicholas Noon of 11 North Main St. permission to reopen a window on the second floor of their home. The window faces Main Street. They were also allowed to move the flagpole to the backyard, reroof a porch and add three columns on the side. That approval was given after the commission waived a hearing.

Public safety organization

Is it time to organize a separate public safety department, bringing the police and fire under the umbrella of one executive officer?

The advisory board think it is something to consider. A call is out for volunteers to serve on a subcommittee of the advisory board. We understand several applicants have indicated some interest in serving on such a board.

Selectman Jane Goedecke, at the recent session of town meeting, questioned whether the advisory board has the power to appoint a subcommittee.

Obviously there are other committees in town already set up and qualified to study the issue.

The town government structure committee might well give a thought or five to the concept. The committee's in-depth study of the ambulance certainly has left town officials with food for thought.

But perhaps to take on a study that would have such a deep impact it may be well to have a separate committee. Perhaps the selectmen would like to make the appointments and offer a suitable charge.

Certainly there are other communities of similar size that manage to do more coordination between police and fire departments. Using one civilian dispatcher to funnel police and fire emergency calls seems to work well in Hanover and Norwell.

When Richard Barrow ran for selectmen last spring, the retired police sergeant talked about the possibility of a consolidation of the town's two public safety departments.

Since the selectmen have already put the fire chief on notice that they do not plan to renew his contract, it is definitely the time to think about making a change the way our police and fire departments operate.

This is the time to look into idea of one chief for the two departments. It is also the time to look into a civilian dispatcher. And it is the time for our officials to take charge of an opportunity.

Change is always difficult. No one ever finds comfort in change. But growth and coordination are worthwhile goals — goals achieved through planning and development.

We want to see some energy spent on the idea. There is a possibility of greater efficiency and even some savings. Let's look into it now.

Government Island Committee seeks members

(The following letter was sent to the Cohasset Mariner for publication.)

Dear Cohasset Residents,

Thank you for your overwhelming support at the June 26 continuation of Town Meeting. We now have the opportunity to preserve the historic lighthouse keeper's residence (the Government Island Duplex) while making it available for public use. As the town's principal water/harborfront property, it has tremendous potential to become a focal point of community activity and another "crown jewel" of this beautiful town.

Our Committee has scheduled a meeting for Wednesday, July 31, for the purpose of electing officers and members to the non-profit organization that is being formed to accomplish renovations and administer the Duplex.

If you want to be considered for membership in the non-profit organization (or simply volunteer), please contact either myself or Mr. Herb Towle, 383-0211, not later than Tuesday, July 30. We would enthusiastically welcome persons who will add talent and commitment to this community service endeavor that is intended to benefit all Cohasset residents.

Best regards,
Joseph R. McElroy, Chairman

Why Massachusetts is better than Connecticut

(Editor's note: We hear a lot about the state of the state. This reporter (who covers Abington and Rockland) gave us perspective.)

By Steve Adams
Mariner staff

One of the more common questions I've been asked whenever I mention that I'm from Connecticut is, "Any particular reason you moved here?"

I realize it's one of those polite conversational-type questions, but I don't think they would ask it if I'd moved from, say, Newark, N.J. to Palm Beach.

Not that I'm comparing Connecticut to Newark, N.J., of course. Newark has far more culture.

I've decided the best way to explain it is to make a list of 24 reasons why Massachusetts is better than Connecticut. It took me 20 minutes, or roughly the amount of time it takes to drive down Route 3 to our office in Marshfield, to come up with this list, which leads me to suspect that this is merely the tip of the iceberg. But it's a start:

1. Massachusetts has Boston, a.k.a. the Hub of the Universe. Connecticut has Hartford, a.k.a. the Insurance Capital of the World.

2. Massachusetts has Harvard Square and Kenmore Square. Connecticut has Constitution Plaza.

3. Massachusetts has the Celtics, the Red Sox, and the Bruins. Connecticut has the Hartford Failures, I mean, Whalers.

4. Massachusetts has the Southeast Expressway, the Mass Pike, Route 128, Storrow Drive and the Central Artery. Connecticut has, uh, the Connecticut Turnpike.

5. Massachusetts has Boston magazine, devoted to chronicling life in the Hub of the Universe. Connecticut has Connecticut magazine, devoted to chronicling the intriguing world of antique shops in Litchfield County.

6. Massachusetts has the sixth-highest auto insurance rates in the nation. Connecticut, the Insurance Capital of the World, has the fourth-highest.

7. Massachusetts has the South Shore, the North Shore, and the Cape. Connecticut has Long Island Sound, but most people prefer to drive to Rhode Island for real waves.

8. Massachusetts has WFNX, WBCN, WBOS, and Tunnel Radio. Most people in Connecticut listen to WAAF or a classic rock station from Westerly, R.I.

9. Massachusetts has Howie Carr and the Hack Hotline. Connecticut has Charles Morse and "Political Insights."

10. If you like politics, you'll love Massachusetts. There are town elections every week from January until July, which makes campaign signs as integral a part of the landscape as cranberry bogs. And in October, get used to the sight of placard-waving activists on every highway overpass. We have Ted Kennedy, John Silber, Tip O'Neill, Bill Weld, John Kerry, Ray Flynn, and Billy Bulger. Connecticut has Lowell Weicker, Christopher Dodd, and a bunch of bland politicians you've never heard of.

11. Massachusetts loves catchy nicknames and abbreviations: Mass Millions, the Mass Pike, Comm. Ave., The Hub, Mass General, Southie, the Mass Miracle, the Duke. Connecticut could have catchy nicknames utilizing the Conn. prefix, but no one has ever bothered to think them up. (Hint: Conn Dome, Conn Census, Conn Tent, Conn Course, etc.) My college had an activities room called Conn Cave, but I'd be willing to bet that a student from Massachusetts thought it up.

commentary

12. Massachusetts has Bob Lobel. Connecticut has Dave Smith.

13. Massachusetts has Chet and Natalie. Connecticut has Don Lark and Denise Discenzo.

14. Massachusetts has the Boston Garden and Fenway Park. Connecticut has the Hartford Civic Center, which collapsed in 1978. They should have never rebuilt it.

15. Massachusetts has 351 cities and towns, and most natives haven't heard of 90 percent of those west of Framingham. Some seem to have been invented by basketball fans: Erving, Russell, Leyden, Alford, Monroe, Washington, Gill, Spencer, Richmond. Others have a far-away ring: Peru, Florida, Princeton, Holland, Wales, Lunenburg.

16. Massachusetts towns have exotic pronunciations: Billerica, Haverhill, Chelmsford. Connecticut has towns with names like Moosup, Uncasville, Moodus, and Cos Cob. Unfortunately, they're pronounced exactly as they appear.

17. Massachusetts has Newbury Street and Filene's Basement. Connecticut has the West Farms Mall.

18. Massachusetts has the commuter rail, commuter boats, buses, and the 'T.' We've got the Green Line trolleys, the Red Line from Braintree to Harvard Square and Alewife, and the Blue Line to the track and the beach. Connecticut has, uh, the Connecticut Turnpike.

19. Massachusetts has the planned Central Artery Tunnel, which will cost 20 zillion dollars, take 15 years, and send hordes of rats out of their underground hovels into downtown neighborhoods. "Scheme Z" isn't a B-52's song, it's the plan for an exit ramp in Charlestown the width of two football fields. It'll be the biggest single structure in New England, except for George Keverian. Connecticut has the Baldwin Bridge replacement project, which they've been talking about since the mid-1960s. It still isn't finished. The Tobin Bridge makes the Baldwin Bridge look like a pedestrian walkway.

20. Massachusetts has the North End, the best-smelling neighborhood in New England. To find genuine Italian cuisine in Connecticut, you have to drive to New Haven.

21. Massachusetts has Patriots' Day and Bunker Hill Day; Connecticut has no equivalent holidays.

22. Massachusetts has the Boston Marathon, and everyone gets the day off to line the streets of the Hub. Connecticut has the Greater Hartford Open, and everyone gets to watch golf highlights on the six o'clock news.

23. Massachusetts has the Fourth of July fireworks on the Charles. Massachusetts has First Night. Connecticut people sit home on New Year's Eve and watch Dick Clark's TV special. Or they turn in early.

24. Bay Staters call in sick if it's Opening Day at Fenway or if the Celtics have a playoff game on a Thursday afternoon. Connecticut residents say, "Oh, who are the Celtics playing?

New beacon shines from Scituate lighthouse

By Andrew MacLellan
Mariner staff

After 131 years of dormancy, Scituate's lighthouse has once again opened its watchful eye.

The copper dome is free of patina, the slender 80-foot tower gleams with a new coat of white paint, and the lone beacon, which for decades guided mariners safely into Scituate harbor, turns its light toward shore.

Hundreds of spectators filled the parking lot at Cedar Point Saturday evening to witness the relight-ing of the historic signal lamp.

State Rep. Frank Hynes was on hand to "recognize and congratulate the historical society on its ever vigilant efforts to make sure . . . the light remains a part of Scituate history."

Historical society president Kathleen Laidlaw, who took advantage of a Coast Guard regulation allowing a white light to shine landward from the non-registered navigation aid, recounted some of the folk history of the lighthouse and its importance to the community.

"The lighthouse is really the symbol of Scituate," she said, "and what we're doing tonight by lighting this white light is to bring it alive."

Built in 1810, the historic lighthouse, which is the third oldest in New England and 11th oldest in the country, was decommissioned after the erection of Minot's Ledge Light in 1860.

Because Scituate's lighthouse was frequently confused with Boston Light, it was allowed only to carry a local navigational beacon and, more recently, a blue light.

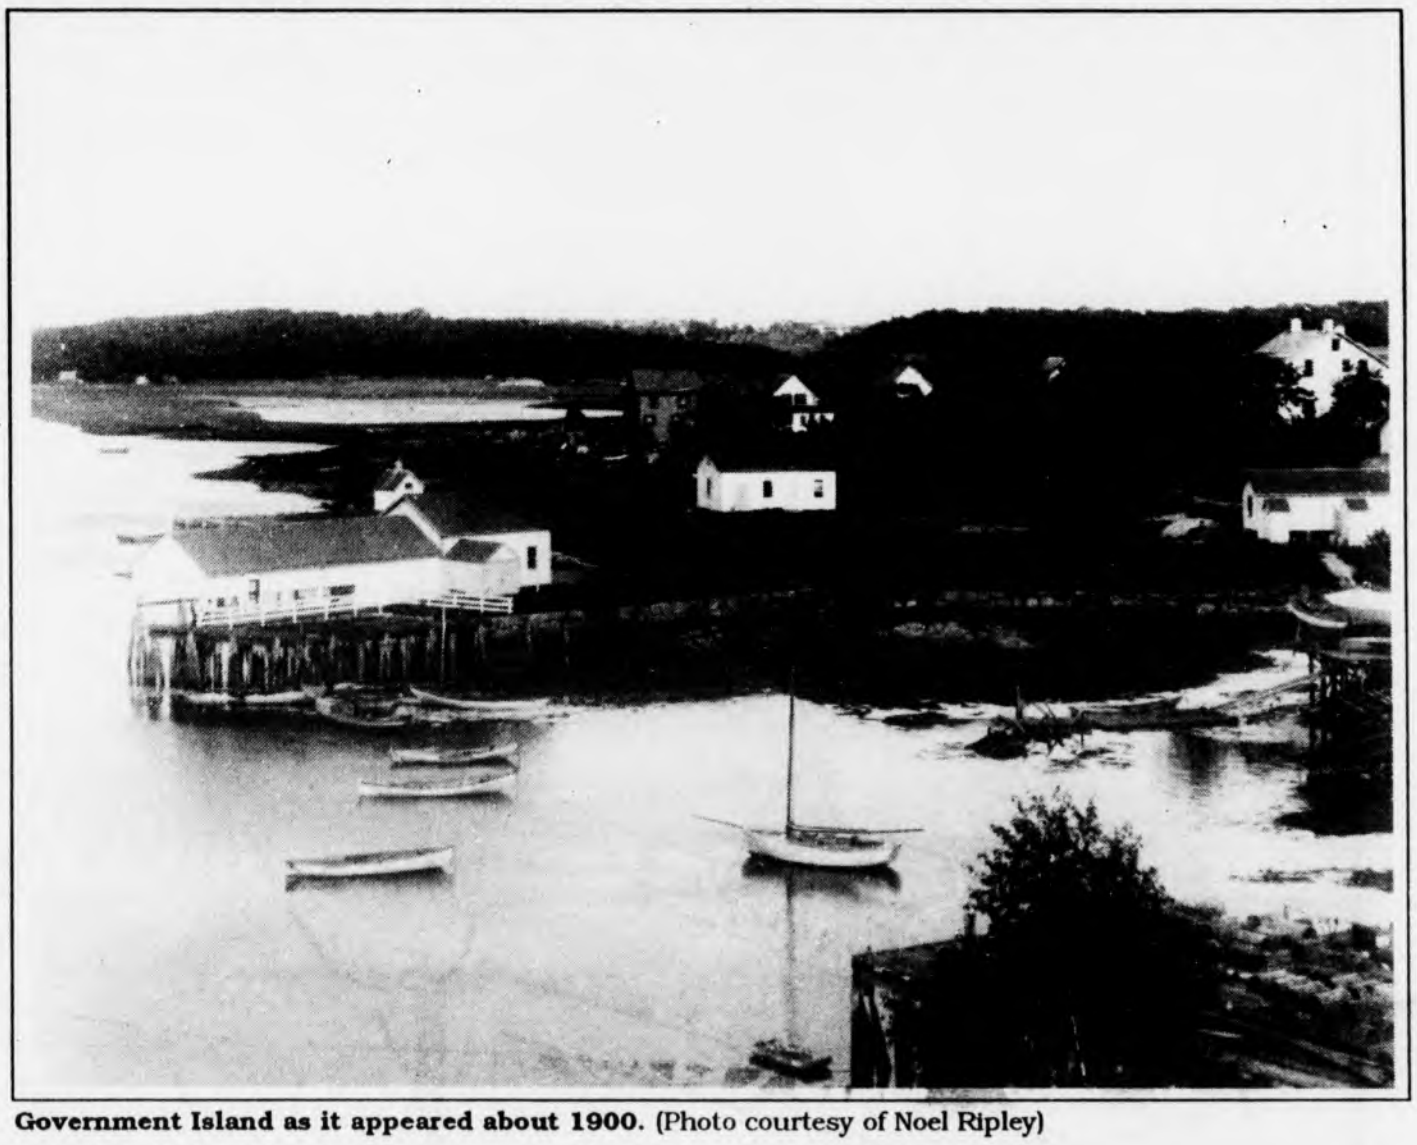
The historical society and Laidlaw saw hope for the aging structure which the town purchased in 1912 for $4,000.

In 1966 they offered to oversee the lighthouse and for $6,800 restored it to its original condition.

The adjacent building, which had housed the original lighthouse keeper, Simeon Bates, and his two famous daughters, Rebecca and Abigail, is rented and the fees are used to maintain the property.

Presentday lighthouse keepers George and Ruth Downton waited five years to move into the five-room home.

"It's a wonderful place to live," said Ruth Downton, who works with the society to preserve the flavor of the 181-year-old building.



"The historical society does all the work. We cannot change the basic structure of the building, but we can decorate it.

"They're absolutely wonderful," Laidlaw said of the Downtons. "They're openly cooperative with the historical society. I could bring 50 school children to visit almost at the drop of a hat.

"When someone cooperates like that, it helps a great deal."

A plaque in front of the house relates the story of Abigail and Rebecca Bates, who single-handedly repelled a British invasion during the War of 1812 by playing the fife and drum.

The British navy heard the music as they sailed their way through the mouth of the harbor and, thinking the local militia were lying in ambush, retreated.

Tom Dorr, whose family has cared for Scituate's historical buildings for almost 30 years, resoldered and patched the tower with brother John.

Ocean moisture, which expands and contracts with the temperature while trapped inside the lighthouse, cracks bricks and necessitates frequent repairs.

In an effort to limit expensive repairs, Scituate resident Carl Heine fabricated a copper ball at New England Steel Tank in Quincy, which the Dorrs installed atop the domed roof. The ball houses a ventilation fan which hopefully will increase air circulation throughout the structure.

The light itself consists of a 250-millimeter lens ground by a Texas company specializing in navigational devices.

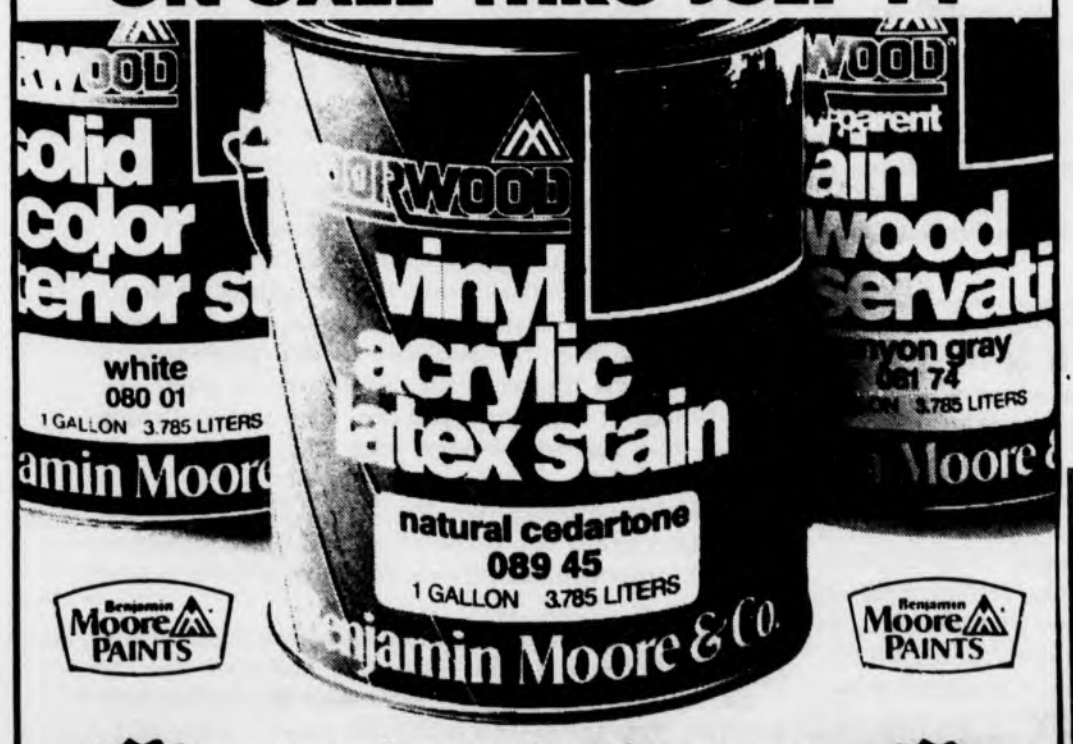
The existing 100-watt bulb will be replaced soon with a 12-volt halogen light and will generate about 15,000 candle power, estimated Joseph Lebherz, who helps maintain Gurnet Light in Plymouth and Minot Ledge Light off Scituate's coast.

Heine also fabricated a shield which surrounds the light on the seaward side.

A 150-degree trajectory will light everything on land from First Cliff to Sand Hills, flashing once, then twice quickly, every minute.

The light is on a timer and will shine from about 8 to 11:30 p.m. each evening, said Laidlaw.

Residents honored in fight against cancer



Several residents were presented with special awards for outstanding service in programs of the American Cancer Society at the recent annual meeting of the South Shore Unit of the Society.

Sharon Becker of Cohasset, a member of the town's Board of Health and co-chair of the Unit's Public Education Committee, was cited for her leadership in a campaign to limit smoking in town restaurants which was voted at the town meeting in April. She was presented with an award from the Massachusetts Division of the Society and a Unit award for her work on the public education committee.

Indian powwow sends pro-earth message

By Todd R. Wallack
Mariner correspondent

An Indian who crafted drums from non-biodegradable plastic pipes that were headed for the dump says he got the inspiration from his native American ancestors.

"It's no different from the Indians who used tin snuff boxes they found on American soldiers, killed in battle, to make silver-colored cones," says Warren Smith. The cones were used as decorative jewelry worn in the hair.

Smith was selling his instruments during the 15th annual Indian powwow held at the South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell. The Order for the Preservation of Indian Culture sponsored the event which attracted dozens of vendors and more than 2,000 visitors.

Along with the plastic piping which formed the drum barrel, Smith used leather and contact paper to make his drums.

"I call it my Mother Earth drum because it keeps material out of the landfill," says Smith, who lives in Sanbornton, N.H.

"Perennially, it is a celebration," Chief One Bear Tremblay said. "This is our life. These are ancient traditions we are trying to keep alive."

Educating people through powwows and the recent movie, "Dances With Wolves," have helped make native Americans welcome in Norwell, One Bear said.

" 'Dances with Wolves' has done for us what the Persian Gulf has done for patriotism in this country."

Environmentalism became an underlying message of the powwow as many native Americans spoke reverently of Mother Earth. When Anguantais from Lowell was introduced to a crowd of spectators between intertribal dances, he stressed this green message.

"Let us protect our Mother Earth," Anguantais said. "Our young people will suffer if we do not protect our Mother."

An 18-year teacher from Arlington said most of her fifth grade students are unaware of native Americans' care for the environment.

"These kids, if you don't reach them, have a negative view," said Effie Williams. "My students come in thinking that Indians are the ones that scalped the white man."

Williams said she teaches them they were the first Americans and did not harm the earth.

Intertribal dancing was another important part of the powwow.

Sleeping Man, a Micmac medicine man, prepared a circle for dancing by warding off evil spirits with a pair of deer antlers in one hand and a rattler in the other.

Six members of the Roaming Buffalo Singers chanted traditional Indian songs and steadily beat a large drum.

Maurice Briere or Grandfather Oak, 87, did not let his age discourage him from dancing. A fan of ballroom dancing and the rumba, Briere particularly enjoyed this part of the powwow.

T.O.P.I.C. will use money raised by the powwow to support two charities to help the homeless, Pine Street Inn and Rosie's Place, and an organization which helps Navajo Indians in New Mexico. The 110-member organization also provides $100 college scholarships for children of members.

The non-profit organization, created to "promote the love of the native American culture" will also use the money to help pay rent at the Veterans of Foreign Wars post in Weymouth, where members meet on the second Saturday of each month.

Other native Americans included Maura Bermudez and her son, Kilder Fuentes, who sold Indian ceramics.

They trace their roots all the way to Peru. Members of the Quechua tribe, which is descended from the Incas, they lived in the ancient Incan capital of Cuzco before coming to New York City three years ago.

Fuentes said his mother, who speaks little English, earns money by painting unfinished ceramics from South America. One such item, a whistle with seven notes, could be heard from all quarters of the campsite. In Peru, local Indians use it as a musical instrument.

CCC Tourney winners

It was a South Shore community event from beginning to end. Over $8,000 was raised during the June 28 to 30 weekend in the second annual Cohasset Community Center Benefit Round Robin Tennis Tournament. The 15 committee members organizing the event were from Cohasset, Hingham, and Scituate under the leadership of Linda Coyle and Betsy Connolly of Cohasset. The 278 tennis players from a variety of South Shore towns and Boston played in the youth and adult tournaments and the money raised will now benefit the Cohasset Community Center which offers programs for people of all ages (six months to the elderly) from many towns. Specifically the money raised will be used for the Nursery School Playground Project, the Nardo Scholarship Fund and the Mortgage Reduction Program.

The tournament was sponsored by the corporate support of Stop & Shop and Gillette with additional contributions from many businesses. Held on 18 private courts in Cohasset and Scituate and despite the high temperatures on Friday and Saturday, and rain and grey skies on Sunday forcing the finals to be played indoors in Scituate, the tournament was considered a great success and registration increased by 40 percent over last year. The enthusiastic committee has already set the 1992 tournament dates for June 26 to 28, 1992.

The winners for 1991 Youth Tournament were:

Beginner Girls — Jacqueline Kahn and Lydia Guild; Kim Welby and Katie Brister; Elizabeth Hurley and Michelle Buckley; Danielle Nohe and Tammy Maitland.

Beginner Boys — Jake Nohe and Chris Pratt; Alex Schwerin and Jeff Flanagan.

Intermediate Girls — Jessica Osler and Patsy Lydon.

Intermediate Boys — Nate Cotter and Tom Costin; Scott van Hartesvelt and Daniel Thaxtersteele; Ryan Freeman and Eric Henry.

Intermediate Mixed — Eric Braun and Jane Noblet.

Advanced Boys — Joey Slotnick and Tim Brister.

The winners in the 1991 Adult Tournament were:

Beginner Mixed — Ross and Patty Smith.

Intermediate Mixed — James and Barbara Moore.

Intermediate Women — Paula Walsh and Sharon Hansen.

Intermediate Men — Rick Flynn and John Magruder.

Advanced Mixed — Chum Steele and Debbie Thaxter.

Advanced Women — Holly Sarni and Mary MacLean.

Advanced Men — Jose and Joseph Lizardo.

The winners of the raffle held at the Point-After Party were: Mary Buckley, Olga Nohe, Betsy Connolly and Mimi Mulvey.

A season's interesting finale at CHS

By Peter Kasperowicz
Mariner correspondent

Softball coach Mike Gill had hoped for a better year. His team was 6-10 in the South Shore league, a surprising record for a team with such strong talent.

"Injuries took us out of the line up," Gill said, pointing out Alison Ludlow's broken nose as an example. Ludlow, who plays shortstop and was an all-star last year, missed the last few games of the season due to her injury.

Gill credits his team for not getting discouraged. "It's real easy to get down when you're not winning, but not this team. They always had a good attitude and they always gave 100 percent on the field," he said.

"Individual highlights were Kara Manion's .450 batting average. Manion played left field and was an all-star this year. Heather Bass, third base, hit close to .400 and is one of next year's returning starters.

Gill will lose five seniors this year: Manion, centerfielder Barbara Lagrotteria, starting pitcher Nicole Barry, and Maureen and Kay Long, who both played in the outfield and as designated hitter. Junior Tyree Pienemann, first base, is moving. As the saying goes, next year will be a building year.

Gill is counting on his returning players to cover the bases next season: Jen Knowles, Danielle Shaughnessy, Heather Bass, Alison Ludlow, Rebecca Toska, Jen Anstead, Lisa Schramm and Carol Smith.

CHS GOLF

"You have to be patient."

"It's more mental than physical."

Jim Franey's golf team closed out the season with a 2-9-1 record (win, loss, tie). "I think we hit a time when all the other teams were peaking," explains Franey.

Although the golfers will have lost John Mitchell, John Hunter and Mark Batts to graduation, Franey feels confident of the upcoming talent.

"It's good to start them out young," he said. "When I started coaching the team, we had about 50 kids on the team, and most of them played with their fathers every weekend. Now I have about 14, and most of them are taking it up for the first time."

Franey is looking for veterans Brendan McCarthy, Joe Gagliano and Mike Burns to drive the team next year. Other returning players include Robin Ordelheide, Pete Collins, Matt Morris and Brian Sawchuk. Franey also hopes that Jen Plante will recover from an arm injury and get some playing time in.

"Jen Plante is one of those people who had a great start at golf. She never topped the ball, which is one of those mistakes most newcomers make a lot. Her game began at about 55 strokes for 9 holes," Franey said.

CHS BASEBALL

While most coaches trembled at the thought of graduation this year, baseball coach Ted MacDermott took the news in stride.

"We're only losing one senior and that's Matt Berger, who did an outstanding job at first base," MacDermott said. "What we're left with is a nucleus that's been together for two years now."

That nucleus includes outfielders Chris Rolandelli, Brian Patterson and Ryan Cibelli, and infielders Jim Magner, Ben Berger, Joey Andrade, John Maynard and Nate Fiore. Utility player Ryan Freeman will also be back. Many players will be sophomores next season.

Attention adventurers

Suzanne Terry at the Paul Pratt Library and Marjorie Murphy from the Deer Hill Library are looking for those boys and girls entering fifth and sixth grades who said they would join us on Monday and Tuesday evening. What were we going to do? Well, we decided to form a puzzle club. First, we read the story, then we find the solution when we put the puzzle together. Remember, if you are interested in joining, call the Paul Pratt Library at 383-1348 and tell us which night you prefer. Or better yet, just show up at around 7 p.m.

Join the Brigade

The Backyard Brigade has come up with a great way to use all those extra, unwanted, never-ending zucchinis, not to mention tomatoes and anything else that grows in an over-abundance in your summer garden.

The Backyard Brigade is accepting fresh food donations this summer to be distributed to those that most need them (via food pantry, local charitable organizations).

What better way to enjoy the fruits and vegetables of your labor than to know you're helping neighbors-in-need eat better, fresher foods this summer. No garden — no problem. Store bought food is appreciated, too. So, if you don't have a garden pick up an extra head of cauliflower next time you're at the market. Then, simply drop off your food donations at St. Anthony's, First Parish, St. Stephen's and the Second Congregational Church at the beginning of Sunday service.

Or, drop off items at Reed's Country Way Nursery on Wednesday, Saturday or Sunday, or the Community Center on Wednesday before 1 p.m.

The Backyard Brigade will then pick up foods for distribution.

For additional information contact Vicki Kennedy at 383-9538 or Madeline Olney at 383-1492.

Theatre moving

The Company Theatre would like to pass along some exciting news. Directors, Zoe Bradford and Jordie Saucerman have moved their company to a new location for rehearsing and set building. After looking for over a year at various locations they were informed of a space in an old shoe factory on Route 139 in Rockland. The Codman Company of Rockland which now manufactures buffers had some space available on their upper floor. With the closing of Weymouth's South Junior High last summer the troupe was immediately in need of a space to build the sets for its challenging production of "Gloryland The America Show." Fortunately, North Quincy High was available for the performance dates but the sets had to be built in two weeks due to the busy schedule of the theatre. The show went on to win The Moss Hart Memorial Trophy for the "Best Show in New England."

With a new space for storage, the Company will be renting their elaborate sets to other theatre groups who may have similar building space limitations.

While this space is a huge step forward to the Company, they are still searching for a permanent performance space. In the last year they have performed in Quincy, Braintree, Hingham and twice in Boston. They hope to find a theatre who would like to establish The Company as a resident musical-theatre group.

Sports Camps

The Recreation Department will accept registrations for all sport camp programs at the office, first floor, Town Hall, or via mail to: CRD, 41 Highland Avenue, Cohasset, MA 02025. Camp brochures for basketball, lacrosse and soccer camps may be picked up at the recreation office. Application forms are included with the brochures.

Boys and girls nine through 17, who are interested in registering for basketball camp should do so immediately. Boys 12 to 18 who are interested in lacrosse camp need to also register.

V.I.P. Soccer Camp for boys and girls ages four through seven will begin on Monday, July 29, and South Shore Soccer Camps, for boys and girls eight to 18, begins on Monday, August 5 and Monday, August 12. Those interested should register soon to be assured of an opening in their age and ability group.

Both lacrosse and basketball camps represent a new opportunity this summer and both camps are directly by top flight coaches in the respective sports.

Arnie Reppucci and Paul Carroll will direct basketball camp. Collectively the two directors have 30 years coaching experience at the high school, varsity level.

LaCrosse Camp represents a very unique opportunity, as it is one of a very few day programs available in the state. Northeastern University, Head LaCrosse Coach, Dave Lewis, Weymouth High School Head LaCrosse Coach, Tony Manzelli and former Harvard University, stand-out goalie, Terry Kahn of Cohasset, will d rect LaCrosse Camp.

Individually and collectively, the tri-directors of LaCrosse Camp represent one of the finest coaching staff that could be assembled each bringing expertise in playing and coaching perspectives.

Bicycle Team

The Freestyle Performance Trick Bicycle Team will be performing at the Joseph Osgood School on Wednesday, July 17.

The team will do one forty-five minute performance beginning at 10 a.m. The performance will feature two of the nation's best freestyle cyclists doing what can be best described as dance or gymnastics on wheels. Stunts will be performed on the ground and off the top of an eight foot ramp. The riders will spin, hop, twist, and glide their bicycles in all directions to the beat of the music. The show is announced by a professional MC who brings the audience into the show with humor and audience participation.

The Freestyle Performance Team consists of two nationally renown performers who have appeared throughout the United States, South America, and Europe. Heading up the team as owner-manager and performer is 21-year-old Chris Lashua of Allston. Also performing will be 20-year-old Scott Moroney of Shrewsbury. John Dumas of Worcester will be the master of ceremonies. The event is sponsored by the Cohasset Recreation Department.

Admission is $3 and profits will benefit the Summer Playground Program.

Services for Seniors

LDS youth show dedication

Sixteen young people from the Hingham Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints were recognized for their accomplishments at the recent Seminary Graduation. Awards were given for the successful completion of the Seminary year and other achievements.

Most young people attending Seminary get a "jump start" as they get up at 5 a.m. in order to be at Seminary at 6:00, five days a week from September through May. "It takes a tremendous amount of dedication and self-discipline to complete Seminary," says Seminary teacher Carolyn Nielsen of Hingham.

To qualify for a Certificate of Completion a student must attend at least 80 percent of the Seminary classes offered, show mastery of 25 selected scriptures, and attain a passing grade for the year.

Senior Josh Mormann of Marshfield was awarded a Certificate of Graduation in recognition of successful completion of four full years of Seminary. Jeff Pugmire of Duxbury was awarded a Certificate of Achievement which is given to Senior students who have completed their senior year of Seminary but have not completed four full years. Students also received awards for perfect attendance, scripture reading, and scripture memorization.

A conversation with Josh Mormann who is now a Seminary veteran, and Shelly Arkell, of Hingham, who has just finished her first year in Seminary, indicated that both Josh and Shelly felt that Seminary helped them to do better in public school. Shelly said that attending Seminary helped her be more awake in school. Josh found that getting up early helped him discipline himself.

Shelly and Josh both had expectations about Seminary that were very different from what they actually experienced. Shelly's expectations were so different from what she experienced that she couldn't even remember what those expectations were. She liked Scripture Chase the best. She was glad she came because she learned more fully what happens in the Book of Mormon. She has always known the Book of Mormon stories, but attending Seminary gave her a broader perspective and understanding of them.

Josh remembers quite well that he expected Seminary to be boring and uninteresting. He discovered it to be vibrant and lively. Seminary gave him a "Jump start" on his day, he said. He found that uniting with members of the Church every morning was a great way to start the day. It helped him build his testimony and grow personally in every way.

Over the four high school years the young people study the Old and New Testaments, the Book of Mormon and Church history. The course is offered at no charge by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Interested non-member youths are welcome to attend next year's classes.

Leo's Tigers lose 5 to 2 to Hingham

Submitted by John Kinchla

The score was Hingham 3, Cohasset 2, with four minutes left, when burly Tiger defenseman Tim Conroy collided with a Hingham player prowling around the Cohasset net. Tim's hit resulted in a two-minute penalty. Hingham's power play registered an insurance goal, when the puck deflected off a Cohasset stick. With the puck in Hingham's end and one minute left Cohasset pulled their goalie and added another skater. On the faceoff, the puck took a Hingham bounce, squirted into the Cohasset end and was shot into the Cohasset net. Thus, Cohasset's fate was now sealed with the final score Hingham 5 and Cohasset 2.

Obviously, there were moments in this game when the momentum seemed to be either all Hingham or all Cohasset. In the final eight minutes of this game, Cohasset was the team that was coming on strong and the bulk of the credit for Cohasset's strong performance should be given to Tim Conroy, Charlie Shields and Kevin Mulcahy.

Cohasset's blue line corp kept the score close. Conroy, Cohasset's first line defenseman is a husky 10th grader. His play throughout this game was well measured. His penalty at the four minute mark was not an overzealous or flagrant transgression. He was late picking up his defensive assignment and knocked his man down. His play up to that point had been superb.

Shields continues to dominate within the defensive zone. He has added some sophisticated defensive moves to his game card. He is a strong backchecker now and calculating with his passes to teammates on controlled breakouts. He played a near flawless game against Hingham.

Kevin Mulcahy always comes to play. In this game against Hingham, he dazzled everyone. Kevin scored two beautiful goals. His first goal came with Cohasset trailing 2 to 0, as he angled a knee high slapshot into the right corner. His second goal allowed Cohasset to close to within one goal, after he flipped a rebound under the goalie's armpit. Hingham's one goal lead held until the final four minutes of the game, when a slapshot from the blue line deflected off a Cohasset stick and past goalie Jeff Tosi giving Hingham a 4 to 2 lead.

The Tigers were certainly not intimidated by their opponents considerable reputation. Hingham was considered the 1990-91 Pre-Season favorite for the Division 2 State Hockey Title.

In this contest though, Cohasset out-shot Hingham 30 to 23 but the Hingham goaltender proved to be tough. Numerous times, Cohasset had the Hingham goalie sprawled on the ice with the puck in the slot elusively squirting away.

The Tigers did many things right in this game against Hingham. The defense didn't throw the puck around, they carried it up in search of the open man. Offensively, the team demonstrated some very crisp passing, particularly on their several power play opportunities. The young forwards, Anthony Wigmore, Mike Shields and Brendan Kinchla skated well against Hingham. They skated tight circles around the puck and the passer. They hounded Hingham by closing the passing lanes. Their opportunistic play caused Hingham to make mistakes which Cohasset almost converted on several occasions. They caused the Hingham team to work harder clearing the puck to mid-ice.

The second line of Matt Graves, Dan DeMichele and Chris McKenna was tentative with the puck. All three boys need to work on firing the puck with accuracy from a distance of thirty feet.

Mike Reynolds, Matt Kramers and John Murphy skated as the first line. They tried hard but they couldn't get lucky. The Hingham defense managed to get position on them in the slot. Individually, they are all capable players, but recently they have been out of synch. In some cases, they were too deep to get the centering pass. Cohasset's "goto" man, Mike Reynolds is having problems getting his shot off.

John Kinchla has developed into a fine skater. He has size, intelligence and good strength. He played as a wing last winter. This summer, he is playing as a defenseman. He is making his mistakes now learning the position, but he continues to try hard.

Cohasset's record is now 1 and 2. Both losses came to perennial Division 2 powers Archbishop Williams and Hingham. In both games, the Tigers have been competitive. Cohasset hopes to return to the winning path, against Quincy and Blue Hills Tech on Friday, July 12 and 19 respectively at 7:30 p.m. There is a team practice planned for Wednesday, July 17 at Milliken Field at 7:20 p.m.

Over three games the team has scored 10 goals against 12 for the opposition.

Missing from the Hingham game were Jeff Stone, Brian Buckley, Pat Reynolds, Mike Riley, Charlie Endris, Charlie Smith and Ryan Cibelli.

Special thanks to Steve Wigmore and to the American Legion Veterans for their contribution of tonic to the players after each game.

Team spirit prevails

By Lisa Smith

Strong hitting, fielding, pitching and heads up baserunning characterized this season's play in the second year of the Cohasset Girls Softball League. While observing several games during the season it was easy to see improvements in all areas of play especially in fielding. Highlights included several double plays, near perfect pitching, a run down between third and home plate and more than a couple of grand slams. More impressive than the play however was the show of team spirit and good sportsmanship exhibited throughout the League on all teams. Great job girls.

Special thanks should be extended to the following League sponsors whose help was greatly appreciated: The Cohasset Community Center, Bernard Hamill, Michael Grady, Rooterman, Thaxter, Beckwith & Henderson, BridgeWey Tailors and Hingham Car Wash.

The League was fortunate to have on board a number of umpires who did a great job this season. Special thanks to Paula Knowles, Allison Ludlow, Jen Knowles, Kay Long and Maureen Long.

Lastly the League wishes to thank the coaches and volunteers whose dedication, instruction and commitment enabled League participants to learn and improve their softball skills as well as develop the team concept which was clearly demonstrated at every game. They are: Pete Collins, Ed Connelly, Peter Collins, Martha Freeman, Ed Hettstrom, Linda Hamill, Dan Cellucci, Bill Colwill, Mike Ward, Dennis Dooley, Glenn Pratt, Lee Jenkins, Linda Henderson, Richard Henderson, Topher Henderson, Karen Devine, Lisa Smith and Rose Collins.

Congratulations to all teams on their success.

Summer baseball opens

By Ellen Cogill

Cohasset's 12-year-old summer baseball team opened its season last weekend with a tournament in Hingham at Haley Field.

They played their first game Saturday afternoon, winning 5-2 against Hingham. Frank Abadie brought in two of the winning runs along with Sean Cogill, J.L. Williams and Taylor Devin. Robby Buckley pitched a great game. Taylor Devin made a great catch at second base that ended the game. Robby Buckley received M.V.P. for that game.

Cohasset played a second game Saturday night at the same field winning 10-3 against Milton. Joey Magner pitched a great game with the help of Justin Buckley. Sean Cogill brought in four of the runs with two great hits. Excellent fielding helped win this game. Joey Magner received M.V.P. for this game.

Then on Sunday afternoon at the same Haley Field in Hingham, Cohasset lost 8-4 to Hyde Park.

It was a hard fought game by all its players.

The 12-year-old team coaches are Jay Caron, Kevin O'Connor and David Buckley.

Team players are: Frank Abadie #20, Matt Belson #11, Justin Buckley #12, Robby Buckley #8, Sean Cogill #32, Burke Davis #7, Taylor Devin #22, Tucker Gledhill #4, Andy Hamilton #3, Joey Magner #15, Bobby Meehan #31, Sean Norris #9, Matt O'Connor #6, Bob Stansell #23, J.L. Williams #1.

Flying Scot Results

The Scot fleet held no home court advantage last weekend, giving up first and second place in both races to a couple of visiting Scots from Lake Massapoag. Ironically, Massapoag is Indian for "We Kick Butt."

George Wey took first place in the Cohasset fleet in both races, giving him an overall first place for the season. The Scots have raced 11 times thus far.

Wey was followed by Ray Kasperowicz and the Steve Bartow/ Jack Brister team in the first race. Jack McCarthy skippered Roger Porter's boat into second in the second race, followed by Rick Swanborg. Kasperowicz is now in second place, and Bartow/ Brister are close behind at third.

Local hearing on Cohasset Heights will reopen

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

The story of the Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL) continues to unfold. Here's what's happening:

• the state Department of Environmental Protection, DEP, has ruled out Cohasset as a potential site for sludge from the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority on the basis of the Town Meeting resolution.

• the local board of health is preparing to reopen a three-year-old public hearing on the operation of CHL. The hearing — which was controversial— was not completed.

• on July 1 SAIC Engineering of Lakeville submitted a detailed filing to the DEP in connection with plans to double the facility's size and add six years to its life.

The private landfill at Cohasset Heights is destined to run out of space within two years unless the state grants a new permit that would double the operation.

The board of health is waiting for a legal ruling from Town Counsel Richard Henderson on the correct way to reopen a three-year-old site assessment hearing.

John and Paul Barry, owners of CHL, have been in control of the private dump since 1982. That was the year they purchased the land, off Route 3A, from James Tyeryar who had run the landfill beginning in 1976.

The area currently being filled consists of 23 acres. The expansion sought is 27 acres already owned by CHL. The expansion request also seeks to add to the amount of material accepted per day. Currently the landfill is allowed to accept 299 tons per day of construction and demolition material. The new request

Officials are on the look-out for deadly mosquitos

By David McKee
Mariner staff

Deep in the woods near a pond in Halifax state officials are looking to trap a killer.

The trap in Halifax is one of thirteen located in Plymouth, Bristol, Norfolk and Middlesex Counties to detect if mosquitos are transmitting the deadly Eastern (Equine) Encephalitis Virus which has no cure and killed a Kingston man last year.

Since May 20 when the traps were put in place, no mosquitos have been found carrying the virus, but officials are not celebrating this news.

They continue to monitor the traps twice a week and at the first sign of any contaminated mosquitos, help will be on the way in the form of BTI, Bacillus Thuringiensis Israelensis, an enzyme dropped from helicopters and planes that destroys the larvae of mosquitos.

BTI differs from Malathion because it is destroys mosquitos at the source in areas such as ponds and wooded areas and offers no health side-effects to humans.

Malathion, on the other hand, is a poison which destroys mosquitos as they fly through the air and has side-effects for people with respiratory problems.

The seriousness of the mosquito problem is shown in this year's state budget. In a year with cutbacks or eliminations in many areas especially human service, some $2.2 million was earmarked for controlling mosquitos to the Dept. of Public Health.

In addition, towns on the South Shore fund mosquito control through the Plymouth Mosquito Project.

"We know there will be a risk this year because of the number of cases we had last year," said Ralph J. Timperi, assistant commissioner of the Dept. of Public Health as he inspected the trap in Halifax.

Last year there were three cases of people being infected with the virus by mosquitos, including the late Amiello "Mike" Ruffini of Kingston, who coincidentally, was a former Dept. of Public Health employee.

"But at this point, there's a low risk for disease," Timperi said. "However, a lot depends on rainfall and other factors. And we have to keep people aware of the dangers of this virus."

Donald Buckley (at left), the state's mosquito surveillance coordinator, and David Ruberti, a field technician, examine mosquitoes trapped as part of the EE project.

The traps, which are also located in Hanover, Brockton, and Canton, among others, attract mosquitos through light and carbon dioxide. Humans, which have the blood needed for female mosquitos to hatch their eggs, produce carbon dioxide and draw the mosquitos.

The mosquitos, which must be kept alive once trapped,

Frannie Mitchell just wants to retire

By Andrew MacLellan
Mariner staff

Forty-five years after he opened for business and three years after he tried to retire, Frannie Mitchell of Cohasset is still saddled with his Route 3A filling station.

Costly environmental regulations and resistance from banks and tenants, have prevented Mitchell, who turns 65 in September, from retiring with the nest egg he's been sitting on since 1946.

Finally, things seem to be turning around, he said.

Mitchell bought the service station with his father while still overseas during World War II.

After returning from his tour of duty as a motor pool sergeant in the military police, Mitchell settled into the new building. He gradually expanded the business over the next 13 years.

"My father was my partner," he said from the vacant showroom floor he had leased to Cohasset Marine for the past three years.

"He worked right up until he died at noon time from a coronary occlusion.

"He was 57.

"He raised five kids and did a good job - I guess I'm bragging a bit.

"We worked together a lot. He was a neatnick on

Mrs. Studds died at her home on Blackhorse Lane in Cohasset on July 12 following a long illness.

She was born April 16, 1908, in Garden City, New York.

Tag-a-keg voted

Within 30 days, Cohasset's package stores will be required to place a band around each keg of beer which is sold, detailing the purchaser's name, address and date of birth.

Selectmen approved the program, known throughout the state as "Tag-a keg", after receiving favorable response from the town's package store owners.

Each barrel of beer must be returned with the band in tact, or a $50 deposit will be forfeited.

Similarly, keg deposits will not be honored if the barrel is returned after 60 days of purchase.

The plan is designed to regulate the dispersion of kegs of beer which often find their way into underage age parties.

"If police are called to a party where a keg is used to serve minors, the adult who bought the beer may be traced through an identification number on the keg," drug and alcohol committee chairman Kenneth Knowles said in an April meeting with selectmen.

The Alcohol and Beverage Control Commission endorses the program and within one to two years hopes to mandate it statewide.

$10 of every unrefunded deposit will remain with the merchant and the remaining $40 will be donated the the high school's SADD program.

Super Tuesday override

Responding to a state budget prerogative, which allows towns to take a Super Tuesday override vote in late September, selectmen determined that they did not have enough information regarding the FY '92 budget to take a vote.

Additionally, they said the town may still be exhausted from last spring's override campaign.

However, selectmen were certain that if an override vote is not called this September, the more than $300,000 in local aids cuts to the town will generate a general override election later in the year.

"If the election is held and an override voted," the town would increase real estate taxes sufficiently to cover the cost of aid," said selectmen chairman Ned Tebbetts.

"We are not required to take action," he said of the election, "but when the budget is reviewed in December, we probably will need a general override anyway."

Selectman Martha Gjesteby opted to wait for the state's cherry sheet to be issued sometime in August before assessing the town's fiscal situation.

Furthermore the state legislature still has the option to veto portions of Governor William Weld's line item budget, Tebbetts added.

"I would not recommend a Super Tuesday," said selectman Diana Kornet, "but in the same breath I am sure we will need a major override later on."

Frank Niles, center, offers a few pointers to the 69 players who attended the Cohasset Recreation Department summer baseball camp last week at Milliken Field.

Newsbeat 53 in finals

"Newsbeat 53," the South Shore's local cable news program, has been named as a finalist for the 1991 Massachusetts Community Television Contest.

The program is one of three nominees in the category of Best Local News produced by a Media Professional, traditionally one of the most competitive categories.

Newsbeat 53 is telecast every Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evening at 7:30 p.m. on Continental Cablevision Channel 53 in the towns of Cohasset, Hanover, Hingham, Hull, Norwell and Scituate.

"I really believe that Newsbeat is one of the greatest examples of what local programming can be," said Bill McColgan, who has produced Newsbeat 53 for the past three years. "We rely on the talent and enthusiasm of community volunteers, as well as the dedication and efforts of the programming staff at Continental, and everyone takes a lot of pride in how professional and informative the show has become."

Other regular Newsbeat staffers include the show's director, Mike Finnerty, who is the man most responsible for the on-air "look;" Continental staffers Wendy Larrabee of Hingham, Bob Belliveau, Deb Miles and Jeff Spencer co-anchor Christine McDonald; sports director Greg Hopfe; reporters Peter Whitfield, Charles and Carol Meyer of Hingham, Scott Isbrandt, and Bridget Daily; and field producers Bob Miot and Henry Daily.

The Massachusetts Community Television Contest is sponsored each year by the state Cable Commission. This year's awards ceremony will be held Thursday, July 18 at Framingham State College.

Other Cohasset residents involved in the production include Don Roine, Continental's Program Director for Hanover, and Charles Duquette.

SAFE gains sludge fight

SAFE today congratulated the town, town officials, and residents for their successful efforts to prevent the siting of an MWRA sludge dump at the Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL).

"We have won the sludge fight," said Alix White, SAFE President.

"The state Sludge Siting Commission has decided to remove Cohasset from consideration," said White.

"Now," she said, "we can concentrate our efforts on reviewing the current operations CHL and on stopping the proposed Area V expansion."

"We would like to thank the Selectmen, the Advisory Committee, and each of the 400 residents who attended the June 26 Town Meeting and supported our resolution," said White.

"We would also like to thank the over 600 Cohasset residents who have signed our petition opposing any further expansion of CHL, and the more than 75 residents who have joined, contributed to, or volunteered to help SAFE," said White.

"We would particularly like to thank Sen. Robert Hedlund, who has worked very hard with us," said White, "and Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray."

"This is a win for the entire town of Cohasset," said White. "Your voice has been heard."

Officials are on the look-out for deadly mosquitos

are sent to laboratories in Boston to determine if they contain the virus.

If a mosquito is found carrying the virus, area health boards are alerted and the public is made aware through the media.

There are 46 species of mosquitos in the state, fifteen of them bite humans and only the Aedes Vexans can carry the virus.

It is extremely rare to catch the virus, according to officials. The virus is transmitted to humans after a mosquito first bites a bird carrying the virus, lays its eggs and then bites a human. Very few mosquitos live long enough for a second blood meal.

Mosquitos also can harm livestock, including horses, which is how its name originated.

However, the virus cannot be transmitted to humans from other humans or from horses or other livestock.

Since 1938, there have been 71 cases of humans being infected with the virus. Of those 71 people infected, 42 died.

"There is no treatment for the virus," Timperi said. "And even those who survive the virus end up with life-long disabilities such as paralysis or reduced mental and motor functions."

Symptoms of the virus include a stiff neck, temperatures as high as 106 degrees, confusion, disorientation and mood changes.

"What happens is the brains swells up larger than its normal size," Timperi said. "And within four to five days after being infected, a person lapses into a coma."

There are ways to prevent exposure to mosquitos. Some of the most effectives steps, according to state officials are:

*Prevent standing water on your property.

Mosquitos reproduce in still water and even items such as used tires are breeding grounds.

*Install screens in all windows and doors and keep them in good repair.

*Avoid swampy areas where mosquitos live and reproduce.

*Stay indoors during peak mosquito activity. Mosquitos are most active during the early morning and early evening hours.

*Wear protective clothing and use repellants if you have to go out. This includes long pants and a long sleeve shirt and repellent on exposed skin.

Wompatuck State Park operates on bare bones budget

By Linda Veracka
Mariner staff

The trickle down effect of the state's passing a balanced budget has hit Massachusetts' state parks hard.

The 3,600-acre Wompatuck State Park in Hingham has gone from 15 seasonal employees to five, according to park manager, Glenn Holmes.

One of the positions that wasn't funded this year was that of naturalist.

"We were very disappointed to say the least," Holmes said. "He conducted an evening astronomy program, took campers on bicycle tours during the day, took groups birdwatching at various sites and had started a junior park ranger program for youngsters who wanted to learn more about the outdoors.

Wompatuck also shortened its season this year, Holmes said. "We did open in April and stayed open through October 15. This year we opened in June and will close right after Labor Day," he said.

Holmes said the reduced staff have had to learn to make better use of their time. "We've been clearing trails, as necessary, and there are many things we've had to put off. Essentially we keep the camping area in good shape," he said.

Attendance at Wompatuck State Park is also way down, Holmes said. "That could be a blessing in disguise. If we had a large number of campers to deal with, with this reduced staff, we would not be able to very well."

Holmes said the campers this year are not the usual returnees. "We lost them when we couldn't open in April," he said.

Those who are coming do so because camping is a relatively inexpensive vacation and because camping is a good way to experience nature. "I think the split is just about 50-50," he said.

All the state parks have had to absorb some pretty deep cuts this year, Holmes said, not just Wompatuck. "But we're all trying to do the best we can with the limited resources we have."

and the sister of Charles Malcom Murphy of Old Lyme, Connecticut, the late Walter Murphy and the late Kathleen Humphrey.

Mrs. Studds was the mother of Gerry Eastman and Colin Auld Studds, both of Cohasset, and Gaynor Studds Stewart of Buffalo, New York.

She is also survived by four grandchildren: Colin Eastman Studds, Tyler Auld Studds of Cohasset, and Kingsley Gaynor Babcock and James Andrew Babcock of Buffalo New York.

Mrs. Studds was an avid gardener and worked for several years as a volunteer at the Cohasset Consignment Shop.

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray (R-Cohasset) remembered her as a good friend.

"(She was) a very sweet, wonderful person. I've known the family since they came to town and she was a great person," she said. "It was always fun to see her. I have missed her."

New cast for 'Housesitter'

There has been a casting change for "Housesitter," the film that will partially be shot in downtown Cohasset in late August.

Mitchell just wants to retire

automobile mechanics. He made stuff instead of replacing it like they do today."

Mitchell's son Brian continued the tradition, working alongside his father in the family business.

His oldest son, Paul, is the general manager of Weymouth Honda's motorcycle division.

Mitchell has lived up the street from his business for 32 years and was looking forward to his last commute across Route 3A.

"I was going to retire - was going to," he emphasized.

"Most especially if I got a sale on this property. That was the idea of it in 1988."

Several factors complicated the process.

"I found out I wouldn't get the social security I thought I should get because I didn't pay myself enough of a salary in the early years," he said.

> "I don't want to quit working, but I feel if I sold I could buy a new pair of shoes if I wanted to."
> -Frannie Mitchell

To complicate matters, the state Department of Environmental Protection, DEP, - formerly known as DEQE - required an environmental assessment to determine if the underground gasoline storage tanks had leaked and contaminated the ground water supply.

"The whole thing revolves around a 21e environmental impact assessment," he said.

"They did a 21e by drilling wells. They sampled them and they were clean.

"According to all the engineers and lab reports it was clean."

Because of the heartening news, Mitchell signed a purchase sales agreement with Ed McDonough and Francis Sullivan, the principals of Cohasset Marine.

However, after the papers were signed and the tanks actually removed, contaminants did appear in the soil.

At a cost of about $50,000, Mitchell hired a private engineer to pump 325,000 gallons of water through a filtration system, returning it to drinkable condition.

While the clean up was in progress, the bank suddenly withdrew its financing, leaving the Marine owners and Mitchell out in the cold.

"They didn't like the report, let's say," Mitchell said.

"These guys couldn't get financing, but I think they only played with one bank.

"Even though my attorney took the report to two or three other banks and they were satisfied, this one wasn't."

McDonough disagrees.

"It was not a clean 21e," he said.

"Because the DEQE is understaffed, they declared the property not a priority site, but said that it can and will be.

"The property, in my estimation, is still dirty.

"When there is a liability and a health hazard, the banks take it more personally than Frannie Mitchell.

"Mr. Mitchell, in his own scheme of things, wants to retire and I can't blame the guy.

"But he wasn't going to retire on me."

"There is nothing in the report that leads me to believe it is a priority site," said Johanna Prindiville, coordinator of constituent services for the DEP.

Because the site is currently unassigned, Mitchell must apply for a waiver before he may sell, she said.

If the waiver is approved, Mitchell may continue the cleanup without DEP supervision, but must submit evidence that the site has been restored before the DEP will grant a clean bill of health.

Mitchell leased the property to Cohasset Marine but had to return to work to make ends meet.

"There's no sense in retiring if you don't have the income you should have," he said.

He has been with Paul Young Motors of Scituate for the past three years.

"I've known Paul all my life," he said. "I went down there when I was thinking about retiring and he said, 'How about giving me some time,' and it turned into 40 hours a week."

Meanwhile, the slumping economy hit the luxury commodity industry hard and many boat dealers went under.

"I did lease the property to Cohasset Marine for three years and they paid a monthly fee," Mitchell said.

"They made some changes, some good, some bad."

Then the business stopped paying their rent and Mitchell took action.

"I got sick and tired of chasing them for the money," he said, "so we asked them to leave; in a nice way, through the courts."

McDonough said that Mitchell gave Cohasset Marine an ultimatum to either buy the property or move out.

The dealership pulled out May 31. Mitchell said he found a 50-gallon drum of toxins in a cement containment box behind the shop.

"The biggest problem right now is that there is a 50-gallon drum of waste oil out back that, in my point of view, was intentionally contaminated."

CYN Oil Corp. of Stoughton found the drum tested positive for benzenes, a toxin commonly found in carburetor cleaner, he added.

"I found a five gallon bucket of the stuff out back in the weeds," Mitchell said, and CYN will not remove the barrel until they are paid, something Mitchell said is not his responsibility.

McDonough said that CYN came to remove the drum a few days after the May 31 lockout deadline, but that Mitchell barred them from the property.

"Forty gallons of outboard motor oil doesn't amount to much when compared with 47 years of pumping gas into an area which is in an aquifer and the flood plain and is in direct relation to Bound Brook," McDonough added.

"There is a little bit of contamination they found out front because they did an update," Mitchell said, "But it's minute."

Several interested buyers have approached Mitchell, and, if the land is returned to a saleable condition, it seems likely he will be able to put his feet up in the months to come.

"It will be nice to sit back and take it easy instead of plugging away every day," he said.

"I don't want to quit working, but I feel if I sold I could buy a new pair of shoes if I wanted to."

Local hearing on CHL will reopen

seeks to accept 500 tons a day of general refuse. The request talks about beginning a recycling program on the CHL site.

Residents have organized to block any expansion on a variety of reasons. The residents' group SAFE contends the operation is a threat to the town's water supply as well as being a threat to the Great Swamp which feeds into the Weir River. SAFE also says there are problems with traffic and odor from the property.

According to the DEP's official filing in the matter, the source of volatile organic chemicals (poisonous materials) in a tributary to Lily Pond (the town water supply) has not been established.

Test wells around the property have shown volatile organic chemicals in the groundwater.

But Ron Goodwin, one of the town water commissioner's and an opponent of CHL expansion, says there is no problem with the toxic chemicals in Lily Pond at this time.

"We want to make sure there is no problem in the future," Goodwin said.

Susan Tierney, DEP secretary, quoted an earlier study saying that 10 percent of the surface water from CHL runs in the direction of Lily Pond.

Included in the July 1 filing from CHL is a statement that the present owner has never been cited by the state for violations of the existing permit.

"However an enforcement order was issued by the Cohasset Conservation Commission on April 26, 1991, for siltation runoff conditions into resource areas and buffer zones in the vicinity of the landfill. It is CHL's understanding that the facility has substantially complied with all issues contained in the order and anticipates it will be lifted in the near future."

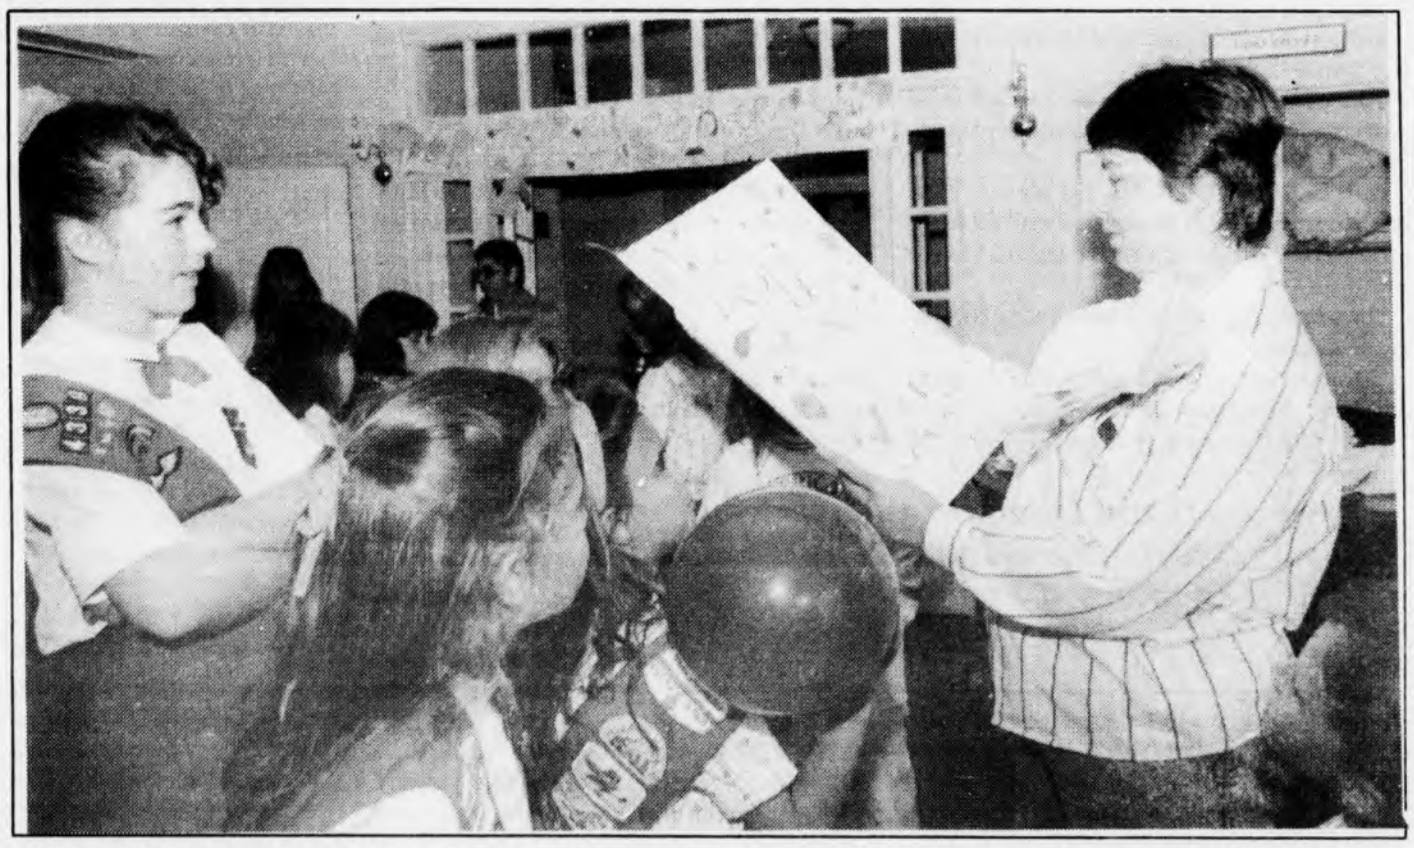
The first Act, "The Lady or The Tiger?", will feature Katy Shea of Scituate in the lead role of Barbara and Doug Moe of Cohasset as Sanjar.



The second act, "The Diary of Adam and Eve," will feature Michael Cisneros and Kate deLima, both of Cohasset, as Adam and Eve, and David Almeida of Brockton as the Snake. The final act, "Passionella" which is based on a Cinderella spoof by Jules Pfeiffer, will feature Kelly Hines of Hull as Passionella and David Dowling of Scituate as Flip, The Prince, Charming.

Rounding out the cast of over forty area youths will be: from Scituate: Caitlyn McDonnell, Sarah and Chrissie Lane, Michaela Joseph, Julie Holland, Sarah Hamill, Kara Kelleher, June Desmond, Sara Verseckes, Clare and Elizabeth Brown, Aisling Sutton, Amy Smith, Becky Ryan, Nicole Principe, Joy and Jason Picknarcik. From Cohasset: Meredith Hansen, Meaghan, Maureen and Kathleen Smith. Hingham: Michael Freeland and Jennifer Allen.

The group will also present the Eugene Ionesco absurd play "The Bald Soprano" Aug. 3 at 8 p.m. and Aug. 4 at 5 p.m. at the First Trinitarian Congregational Church on Country Way in Scituate, under the direction of Peter Law. Appearing in the play will be: David Dowling, Doug Moe, David Almeida, Meredith Finn, Carolyn Hunt, Nicole Principe and June Desmond.

In addition to the shows, the group will hold various fundraisers including a yard-sale on Saturday, Aug. 3 from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the Congregational Church.

Information on these events and tickets can be obtained by calling 837-4027.

Gjesteby may be forced off advisors

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

Town Moderator William Weeks says he is waiting for a ruling from town counsel before convening the official appointing authority, affectionately known as the Troika.

He wants to know whether one of the Troika members has any legal right to continue to serve.

The Troika includes Weeks, the chairman of the board of selectmen, now Ned Tebbetts, and the chairman of the advisory board, currently Arne Gjesteby.

The problem, as Weeks sees it, is that Gjesteby has served two full terms (or six years) on the advisory board and by virtue of the bylaw may not be reappointed.

Gjesteby had said only two weeks ago that he expected to continue to serve on the advisory board until his successor is appointed. His committee met last Thursday, July 11, and there was some discussion of reorganizing but the board decided to continue with Gjesteby running their show.

"It isn't clear from the bylaw what we should do," Weeks said on Tuesday (July 16).

"I asked town counsel to take a look at it and I haven't received a letter from him. I don't know whether we will be making the appointments with Arne Gjesteby as advisory board chairman or with some other chairman."

So Weeks said he will wait before calling another session of the Troika.

Gjesteby is the senior member of the advisory board and has been keeping up with the breaking news on the town's fast changing financial status.

The town bylaw uses a June 30 date for term expiration. There was a time when the town's budget was established well before June 30.

There has been some precedent for waiting to appoint new members to the advisory board until after the budget questions were answered.

Gjesteby won the acclimation of the adjourned session of Town Meeting. A resolution was present to him at the time thanking him for his dedication.

Pleasant Street cemetery plan rolls along

By Andrew MacLellan
Mariner staff

Honoring his pledge to move ahead slowly, cemetery committee chairman Glenn Pratt met with selectmen Monday to review the site selection progress of a proposed five to six-acre cemetery in Cohasset.

About 15 months ago, to the chagrin of area residents, the committee selected a parcel of land behind a heavily settled neighborhood on Pleasant Street.

The site was culled from a field of 18 possibilities throughout Cohasset.

Although the committee has re-examined each site, combinations of ledge, water, wetlands vegetation and prohibitive costs have ruled out every other possibility, according to Pratt.

So sure is the committee that there are no alternatives, they filed an order of conditions with the conservation commission, the next step in site approval.

"Our application was rejected," said Pratt. "You would have thought we were hotshot developers from Los Angeles.

"It is nothing we can't fix, but they asked for information, which in my opinion, is way out of line with the scope of their commission."

Norfolk County engineers are currently working with the commission to iron out environmental impact considerations.

The five-year-old committee, which was recently increased in size by two members and had one vacant seat filled, was created to alleviate a foreseen overcrowding of the town's cemeteries.

According to Pratt, this crisis is no longer as bad as was first thought.

"We still have a couple of hundred graves," he said.

"We can get away with putting a couple in Woodside and a couple in Beechwood, but we're going to have to build a new cemetery sooner or later."

A five or six-acre site would serve the community for about 25 years, Pratt said.

Joe Jerz, a Cohasset resident and civil engineer, asked the committee and selectmen to make more information accessible to the public.

"When the Pleasant Street site was picked, we came back as abutters and asked for other suggestions to be made available. . .," he said.

"I would like to see the issue documented and available for review before we put something through a pretty well-developed neighborhood.

"I feel it is worth it to the 50 families who will be effected."

Jerz suggested putting the job out to bid in an attempt to generate a inexpensive but detailed report evaluating each proposal.

"Send out bids and let the developers handle the licensing, the board reviews and the detailed analysis," he said.

"It's short money and I think we could get a big bang for it."

Although it was agreed that the sluggish economy would probably produce several interested parties, town administrator Greg Doyan was not sure if the town could legally put a job out to bid without first appropriating funds.

Pratt estimates the development costs of the Pleasant Street site to be more than $100,000, far less than the $1 million originally proposed.

Selectmen asked the cemetery committee to prepare a summary of their review process for the public.

The two to three page report will be forthcoming by Labor Day, Pratt said.

Other suggestions included removing a road in the Beechwood cemetery which would create 40 to 80 new graves, Pratt said.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle recommended approaching the Music Circus for a land trade, and Doyen mentioned a parcel of land which was transferred to the housing authority but failed percolation tests for housing purposes.

Jerz proposed using part of 25-acres of land behind town hall for a new cemetery. Although Pratt said the site is composed of ledge, Jerz was optimisitc that at least part of the town-owned land would be suitable.

Joseph Lizardo of the Philippines and his brother Jose Lizardo of Scituate accept trophies for their win in Cohasset Community Center's tournament. They captured the top slot in the advanced men's category. Presenting the awards are: Betsy Connolly, tournment chairman, left, and Glenn Pratt, president of the Center's board of directors.

SAFE wants CHL discussion

SAFE today requested the board of health to take an hour of their Aug. 13 meeting to discuss an application that Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL) has filed with the state.

CHL, under the new state solid waste regulations, has filed an Existing Facilities Permit Application (EFPA) with the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP).

"We have asked the board of health to have a public discussion of this EFPA application," said Alix White, President of SAFE. "This discussion will hopefully lead to an improvement in the regulation of this landfill and further environmental protection for the residents of Cohasset."

"CHL will need eventual approval of this application by DEP to stay in business," said White. "The EFPA is a public document which can be discussed and reviewed by the public."

SAFE also asked the Board to specifically place the "spotter" issue on that agenda item also, since the "spotter" issue is addressed in the EFPA, and is thus open for public discussion. They also asked the Board to make a specific invitation to Paul Barry, operator of CHL, to attend this meeting.

Finally, SAFE requested the board of health to place on the agenda that they will consider and vote on whether to reopen the CHL site assignment hearing, which has been open since 1987.

"We urge all Cohasset residents to review this EFPA, to educate themselves about the potential environmental threats from the landfill operation, and to attend this Aug. 13 meeting," said White. SAFE has placed two copies of the EFPA at the Paul Pratt Library for review by the public, she noted. (Ask for it at the desk.)

• Don't the flowers in the empty lot between the old Village Market and Tedeschi's look nice? Everyone is enjoying Phil Carney's hard work at planting the flowers and his careful care tending to them.

Members of the Men's Breakfast Club will help him through the summer, but he has put in a lot of work already. We can all help keep the area looking nice by using the litter basket Cohasset Savings Bank put up last year. Village Renaissance member Ann Whelan, who helped coordinate and plant the flower boxes, planters and hanging plants for the village merchants and businesses this season, also wants to thank Cohasset Savings Bank who donated the money for the flowers for the garden and Marge Santecruz for her help. And, while we are on the subject of local color, the pretty flowers in the planters near the town pump were planted and are being cared for by Tina Watson of Cohasset Hardware. Great job, folks.

• It was lucky July 13 in Niagara Falls, New York for Cohasset's Ellery Clark. Amid thunder, lightning and heavy rain, Ellery heel-and-toed to the National Championship in the 10 kilometer race walk, held by the Athletics Congress (the governing body of American track and field).

To add to the drama the Cohasset native slipped and fell on the roadway blacktop, but quickly regained his feet and clung to his lead. After the race Clark had seven stitches in his forehead. He was awarded the championship medal and a small patch to wear which said, "The Athletics Congress, USA Masters Champion." Because of his sparkling time of one hour, nine minutes, 48 seconds it is likely this fall he will be chosen a 1991 member of the All American Race Walking Team, for his age group of 80 plus. Ellery's late father won two titles in his track career and this is Ellery Jr's first.

• The committee is hard at work, planning the second Tennis Tournament for Children's Hospital. There will be 16 courts in use around town the dates are August 3 and 4. Call Annie Abbruzze at 242-9242 or Joy Pratt at 720-4792. They will be able to fill you in on all the additional information that you might need.

• Happy belated birthday to Anita Bernstein. Hope that your day was a happy one and that this is the beginning of a grand year for you.

• There will be no meeting of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce this month, but circle your calendar for a breakfast meeting on August 14 at 8 a.m. at Kimball's By the Sea. The featured speaker will be Wayne Ayers who is the Chief Economist at the First National Bank of Boston and editor of the Bank's Economic Review. As I share the Chamber's news with you, I keep thinking how lucky we are to have such a group, and that we should all try to shop locally.

• Congratulations to Nancy and Kennan Startzell on the birth of their son, born on June 11 at South Shore Hospital. We all know he will be a grand soccer player...

• And, we also want to congratulate Toby and Jennifer Chamberlain on the birth of their son, born on June 26. Les and Tom Chamberlain must be in heaven with their grandson, what fun. Enjoy him, all of you.

• Hope that lots of you attended the Taverna last week. It is so much fun, and they certainly put in a lot of work to assure its success. Christy Mihos was spotted helping out behind the soda stand, we'll bet a lot of people urged him to run again and assured him he'd win...

• Here's to a long and happy life, filled with love, for Ingrid (little Ingie) Anderson and John Drago. They will "tie the knot" this Saturday, and we'll bet that Ingrid is the prettiest bride to be seen. Good luck and God bless you two.

• A classmate of Ingrid's, Ellen DiGirolamo, is going to be married in November...it's hard to believe that all of these wonderful women are even old enough...

• Don't forget the South Shore Art Center's benefit on August 11. Harry Belafonte will perform at the South Shore Music Circus, then he will join benefit ticket holders at the Art Center for a champagne reception. The tickets are $50 each, which includes both the show and reception. Call the Art Center at 383-9548 for reservations.

Bates Building sale is the will of Town Meeting

A story on page 3 of the Cohasset Mariner last week incorrectly stated Town Meeting disapproved of the sale of the Bates Building to South Shore Habitat for Humanity for a token amount.

This week selectmen were stalled in moving on the sale of the Bates Building this week.

The sales proceeding will take some time. It begins with an advertisement for bids, according to state law.

The selectmen took up the matter and voted two-to-two with Selectmen Martha Gjesteby and Rocco Laugelle opposing the sale for $1 to South Shore Habitat for Humanity.

Habitat wants to create two units of affordable housing in the Bates Building. An early plan of Habitat called for two or three units. Under that plan there would be a one-bedroom unit plus two larger units.

The Habitat officials are now talking about two units with two to three bedrooms.

Oceanside Bike Fest '91

Register now for one or both of the Multiple Sclerosis Society's annual one day bike tours. Oceanside Bike Fest '91 - North and South offers cyclists a choice of two routes, each on a different day. The "new" Northern Tour will be held on Saturday, September 7 and the traditional Southern Tour on Sunday, September 8.

The Northern route takes cyclists on a journey through the estates and estuaries of the historic North Shore, including the beautiful shores of Cape Ann, and begins at the Beverly High School.

The Southern tour, sponsored by Plymouth Savings Bank, is a bike ride that begins in Duxbury and takes cyclists through the coastal communities of the South Shore. Cyclists will wind through the rocky shores of Scituate and Cohasset and take full advantage of the area's forests and parks.

Along with the fun, the top fundraiser and a guest will be flown via Continental Airlines to any destination they choose that Continental flies.

Each mile that you ride will raise funds for national research and provide support services to local people affected by Multiple Sclerosis. Multiple Sclerosis is a chronic progressive disease of the central nervous system affecting over 6,000 people in the Massachusetts area alone. If you want to help these people, but don't want to ride a bicycle, there are many volunteer opportunities available to you for the day. Over 200 volunteers are needed so please call our office for more details on how to donate just a few hours of your time.

For more information on Bike Fest '91, call the Multiple Sclerosis office at (508) 291-2169 for the South Tour or 890-4990 for the North Tour.

On the sale of the Bates Building

A story in the Cohasset Mariner last week contained an error that slipped through the cracks.

The will of Town Meeting is, indeed, in favor of selling the old town hall annex to South Shore Habitat for Humanity for $1.

As most everyone in town knows, Habitat for Humanity is a non-profit organization that uses volunteers to create "affordable" housing. No one within the organization is paid. Most of the people who benefit from the effort are referred through the clergy.

The situation will be slightly different when Habitat seeks out potential owners for the two (to three) units planned for the Bates Building. That's right — owners. People who will have a stake in the building. People who will get a piece of the American dream.

Habitat would advertise the process locally. People applying would have to live in or have strong ties to the community. Someone who grew up in Cohasset would definitely be considered. Income guidelines would come into play.

Town Meeting voted in favor of a resolution to urge the selectmen to sell the Bates Building to Habitat for a token sum back in April. That was before portions of the override failed. It was before the town was hit with the certain knowledge that local aid was on the chopping block. So at the June 29 session of Town Meeting, the advisory board sought out a second opinion. The advisory board saw the Bates Building as one way to come up with a quick infusion of cash — enough to get the town through the fiscal dilemna created by the governor who ran on a platform that talked about aid to cities and towns.

The advisory board isn't in business to set larger priorities. It's concern is financial. The task of that board — and one done with skill and foresight to date — is to offer the best possible financial advice to the voters.

But there are larger priorities.

One strong priority here is education. It's a priority because the children are our future.

Another priority is the quality of life. Now that's intangible. Our conservation and planning boards work to preserve that quality.

Another priority in a world of material concerns calls upon us all to try to provide for those whose needs are greater than our and whose resources might be less extensive.

South Shore Habitat for Humanity reaches out effectively to try to help people in need to basic shelter.

Habitat has existed on the South Shore since 1985. In that time the group has accomplished three major renovations and four total renovations.

Because land is so hard to come by the group is developing a specialty in renovations. They have done a roof, they have built a handicap walkway and they built shelving at Mainspring House in Brockton. The total renovations involved structures that were not too much more than shells. The total renovations involved two homes in Randolph, one on East Bridgewater and one in Marshfield.

Michael Kenneally, vice president of South Shore Habitat for Humanity, (a volunteer position, like all those in Habitat) called the Mariner office this week to make sure a correction would be run on the Town Meeting story.

He talked about the plans his organization has for the building — if the selectmen do go ahead with plans for the $1 sale.

(Monday, July 15 the selectmen attempted to begin the sale process but the vote was 2-2 with one member absent. Rocco Laugelle and Martha Gjesteby do not want to see the token sale happen.)

The plan is that the renovations — materials alone — will cost $100,000. So Habitat, by providing free labor for the work and a no-interest loan, will be able to sell the two-to-three-bedroom units for $50,000 each. The cost works out, using a 20-year mortgage, to $210 a month for each unit.

Kenneally warned the figures aren't cast in cement. It might take more than $50,000 each unit to create something worthwhile.

He said his organization is willing to guarantee 100 percent local preference, if that's what the town wants.

We are delighted to know Town Meeting backed Habitat. We, too, believe this group is doing something important and special. We hope the sale to Habitat proceeds with speed.

Thank you Girl Scout Troop #4339

To the Editor:

As leader of Junior Troop #4339 I would publicly thank the young girls.

These young women have worked hard all year long. From babysitting for the Red Cross to working all three days plus set up at SS Arts Festival/Harborfest. The young women of Troop #4339 have learned to cook a cake in a wine box oven for campers, working on badges and signs, learning about the Five Worlds of Girl Scouts, to prehistoric dinosaurs, and much more.

The young women I thank are: Amy Parisi, Elizabeth Hills, Janet Hoyler, Amanda Bridges, Kara Petrocelly, Jamey Watts, Kaitlin Jackson, Mareth Collins-Wooley, Alex D'Urso, Katherine Ronan, Kyra Lea Cogill, Sara Bertovich, Danielle Anderson, Jessie Zerendow, Caroline DeRose, Jill Magner, Alison Hawks, Jenny Figuerido.

Special thanks for "our" mothers for going camping with us, making cookies and stuffing envelopes and helping at meetings: Mrs. Bridges, Mrs. Petrocelly, Mrs. Watts, Mrs. Hills, Mrs. Hoyler, Mrs. Bertovich. And last, but not least, "one of a kind" thanks to Mrs. Louise Smullen and Ms. Lisa-Ann Langelle.

Insurance salvaged for chiropractic care

To the Editor:

Within the hundreds of pages constituting the proposed state budget known as House Bill 5600 submitted on Beacon Hill last week were contained 7 sections between Section 318 and 331 which had nothing to do with the state budget at all. What they proposed was to totally wipe out all Chiropractic services under Blue Cross Blue Shield and all commercial health insurance carriers within the Commonwealth. Other sections similarly affected the health care professions of Podiatry and Optometry as well. Section 318, for instance, would have deleted the so-called insurance equality law, the law which allows each person to choose the health care provider of their choice and be reimbursed under commercial insurance.

Public demand for alternative health care, such as Chiropractic, resulted in it being offered by insurance companies in the first place. Withdrawing such coverage would have resulted in little or no savings; on the contrary most patients would be forced to seek more expensive alternatives. The state wide outcry against these actions within the budget was based on the fact that these essentially insurance bills could be enacted without public notice, public hearings, or due process of law.

Thanks to an amendment proposed by Representative Larry Giordano, these sections were rightfully removed from state budget considerations. Due to the rallying of many citizens across the state, Legislators on Beacon Hill were called and notified of the needs and wishes of the people. If changes are to be made in the current insurance system, let it be done through proper committees with full public hearings and the knowledge of the citizenry of this state.

On behalf of myself, my profession and most importantly all Chiropractic patients, I wish to publicly acknowledge and thank all of the many men and women who cared enough about personal freedom of choice to contact their senators and representatives quickly and let the will of the people be known. Their efforts are deeply appreciated and will never be forgotten.

Money issues haunt the town

By Tanna Kasperowicz

The disposition of the Bates building has been mishandled since Day 1. Currently, there is a legal vote to advertise it for sale. Barring an injunction against the selectpersons, an appeal to their better senses is being made.

First of all, the Bates building should have been an article on the override election ballot last spring because it is a money article, it represents potential revenue to Tinytown. But, it never appeared on the override ballot because Selectpersons wanted town meeting (where they always get their cookies) to handle it.

Earth to selectpersons — can you read me? I sure hope so. I sure hope three of you can hear me. I'm pretty sure I can hear Rocco Laugelle and Martha Gjesteby.

Tinytown would be in a real pickle if the Bates building were given to Habitat before selectpersons knew what, if anything, an override election produced. It would be a crime to start playing with the school budget after, let's say, Super Tuesday (Sept. 24) because all of a sudden you had outstanding state appellate tax court legal bills, settlements, awards.

You can't just give away real estate for $1 and then turn to Tinytown taxpayers at an override election and say: (l) Oops, we forgot about the state appellate tax court cases. Or (2) Oh, that old Bates building, that wasn't worth anything (hard to believe when one potential low-ball buyer already said he'd give Tinytown $125,000).

Come on, admit it. Who first warned you about the unusual selectperson resolution on town meeting floor giving Arne Gjesteby big kisses and hugs for all his six years on the advisory committee? Who said they did this so he'd leave quick and fast? Me, that's who. So here's what happened last week.

The advisory committee met July 11, to be informed by Advisory Vice Chair Nan Roth that the moderator told her to reorganize the committee and choose a new chairman (per advice of counsel who spent hours researching this Gjesteby crisis).

Now, this should be noted: the last Advisory Chair overstayed his term by four months because the Troika couldn't find citizens to serve on the committee, and by bylaw the committee can't be reorganized until new appointments are made.

Without exception, all outgoing Advisory Chairs have served as the appointing authority for new members. Article V of the general bylaws says: "As soon as possible after the annual appointment of new members, the Advisory committee shall meet and elect from their membership a Chairman and a Secretary who shall hold office until their successors are elected."

Now, here's what I think is happening behind the scenes.

Select Chair Ned Tebbetts the Terrible is trying to pepper boards and committees with Liberal Democrats by trouncing on sitting Republicans who want to be reappointed. Alert! Alert! Republican leaders!

Polly Logan and Julie Guild should have a serious sit-down talk with the moderator. Over the years selectpersons have tried to be bipartisan to the extent they didn't purge boards and committees of persons not perceived as politically correct in the new regime. Maybe they didn't like those people, and of course they put their own people on boards and committees when there were natural openings.

The story continues. Over the years Dems and Repubs who wished to be reappointed usually were, unless they simply didn't attend meetings. Well, times have changed.

Three people on the conservation commission were discredited when Tebbetts said he wished to upgrade the commission. One Selectperson told a commissioner he was too old to serve, she wanted younger people. Pretty tough talk in a Tinytown.

commentary

Last week the advisors (who have not been awed by legal opinions in the past, and weren't last week) voted to continue to recognize Mr. Gjesteby as their true and cogent leader until such time as new appointments are made. They also made four appointments to their fire structure subcommittee. (It's o.k., Richie Henderson and Jane Goedecke, I've already researched it. There's nothing in the bylaws saying the advisors can't appoint a subcommittee).

In the meantime, the government structure committee has re-elected Roy Fitzsimmons chair, and elected Dennis Roth vice chair. Now, pay attention, because this is important. There is nothing in Article V Section 13 (the general bylaws) which says when or how this particular committee should hold an election of officers. If the Troika should refuse to reappoint Fitzsimmons who's first three-year term was up July 1, it certainly could do so. However, it would effectively be denying the committee its choice of chair, a chair who has told the Troika he would like to be reappointed.

The next Troika meeting could be explosive.

Will the Moderator and Select Chair recognize Advisor Gjesteby as a legal member of the Troika, or will town counsel have written some legal mumbo jumbo saying otherwise? If he has, he's wrong.

If they don't recognize Gjesteby as a voting member of the Troika, will they vote on appointments anyway, without advisors being represented?

Will Advisor Wayne Sawchuk make it back to the advisory committee? Will the chair of the government structure return to his committee?

Alas. There are thousands of Tinytown stories. The Purge of the committees is not over yet. Only your attendance at the next Troika meeting (they meet in strange places at exasperating times - but they must post 48 hours ahead) may prevent the Troika from making fools of the many people who serve on boards and committees.

Downsizing the Registry — An idea that can work

By Christy P. Mihos

As the Governor and the Legislature struggle with balancing the state budget, it's time to take another look at one of the old favorites of "bureaucracy bashers" — the Registry of Motor Vehicles. Yes, the Registry makes a great target for downsizing — it has a big budget ($45 million), a lot of employees (1,100) and 37 local offices. And even though former Registrar Bob Hutchinson significantly improved operations at those offices with innovative systems, the Registry's reputation with the public is still very low.

But, downsizing a bureaucracy or a business is a delicate task. Those managers who substitute a meat cleaver for a plan, beware! If you cut just for the sake of cutting, and don't keep your overall objectives and your customers in mind, you'll end up downsizing yourself out of business.

When downsizing the Registry, we can't forget it collects revenues of about $800 million annually and provides the information that allows cities and towns to collect millions more in excise taxes. Nor can one diminish the public safety role of licensing and registering cars. And all of this depends on providing a decent level of services to the citizens and car dealers who must use the Registry daily.

So downsizing the Registry must be accomplished while still efficiently collecting revenues, maintaining records for cities and towns, insuring the public safety, and keeping millions of customers reasonably happy. A tricky task, no doubt.

But, there is a better way to accomplish the duties of the Registry.

The idea is to take full advantage of today's technology and shift the entire process of vehicle registration, license renewals, and other daily Registry business to the cities and towns. Each municipality would be tied into the Registry's main frame computer at the Nashua Street Headquarters. That's right, 351 computer terminals located at Town Halls tied into the Registry's computer resources.

You could go register your car, for example, in a town's assessor's office — or treasurer's office. Imagine no travel to a regional Registry office to be greeted by endless lines and overworked personnel. Go down and get your license renewed in the intimacy of your own Town Hall.

What happens to the 38 Registry Offices? They are reduced to seven, strategically located around the state. There, first-time drivers would receive new licenses after a day-long, comprehensive driver testing and drunk driver education program administered by the Registry arm of the State Police under the new police consolidation.

Conceptually, this plan works. Who better than the cities and towns to administer a program that registers vehicles at the proper local residence, tracks down scofflaws, controls repair plates, collects fines and taxes, and provides good customer services to its residents? With the help of modern technology, these objectives can be achieved best at the local level; not through a huge bureaucracy.

"But," you ask, "what are the costs, how do cities and towns pay for this, and what are the taxpayer benefits?"

Each municipality could open up shop with a photo ID system for $2700 (from Polaroid or one of the other Massachusetts companies who make them!), about $5000 worth of computer hardware and software to tie into the Registry system, and a few other pieces of equipment (eye-testing machine, etc). The Registry would design and produce the forms, labels, plates and other necessary materials.

commentary

Present day revenues generated from the Registry in fees and fines would be shared by the cities and towns and the Commonwealth. These fees and fines and state sales taxes would be collected by the municipalities and paid to the state monthly, giving financially strapped cities and towns the additional benefit from the cash float of holding those funds. In addition, cities and towns could expedite excise tax collections with registration and license renewals.

Taxpayers end up with a system that provides more flexible customer service, maintains the necessary functions of the Registry and a savings of up to $40 million from closing unutilized Registry offices. The time, energy and aggravation savings alone would be worth the effort!

Businesses and government alike must constantly seek out more efficient ways of delivering services with fewer resources. But, meat cleavers don't work in downsizing service-delivery systems when the need for those services has not been eliminated. This plan will allow those necessary Registry services to be provided in a more efficient, workable, and innovative manner to benefit the end user — us. The Governor and the Legislature should give it a serious look .

Legislative report for state budget

officials like myself fought to attain.

First, the FY 92 budget does NOT include an increase in statewide taxes.

Second, the FY 92 budget actually reduces state spending as compared to the previous year's budget.

And third, the FY 92 budget is a legitimate, balanced budget. These are admirable achievements which have been alien to Massachusetts State Government in recent years. Unquestionably, there is much work to be done to restore Massachusetts' fiscal and economic health, but this FY92 budget was a positive first step in that quest. Certainly, these three budget achievements are good fiscal precedents to establish for Massachusetts State Government.

While the direction of the budget was a change, some things stayed the same during the budget process. The Senate voted to suspend Rule 38A which requires at least a 12-hour period between the completion of the budget, and the point where the Senate is allowed to vote on said budget. That rule was established to provide the public with a minimum amount of time to examine the specifics of major legislation. Many of my freshman colleagues joined me in opposing the suspension of Rule 38A.

If anyone has any further question regarding the budget, please feel free to call my office at 722-1646.

ENVIRONMENTAL NOTICE

My office has worked closely with local citizens concerned with protecting our significant environmental resources. We are all pleased to have received a state grant for the Weir River Estuary Park. This grant from the Massachusetts Environmental trust will be directed towards a variety of projects that educate school children and encourage citizen involvement on behalf of the environment. Also, congratulations to all the many citizens who celebrated the 25th anniversary of Great Esker Park. Those who have worked diligently on its behalf have helped all area residents enjoy a great natural resource, and have increased recognition of the archaeological importance of that location.

COM/Electric rates hiked

The Department of Public Utilities has allowed the Commonwealth Electric Company to increase its rates but only by half of its original request.

The company had asked for a $20 million increase; the DPU allowed a $10.9 million increase.

In addition, an independent of the managementand planning practices of the company will begin in January 1992, per order of the commission.

Monthlybills for the average residentialnon-heating customer using 590 kwh per month will increase approximately 2 percent.

Monthly bills for the average residential electric heating customer using 1550 kwh per month will rise by approximately 3.9 percent per month.

Ann Henry is in the swim

Ann Henry, daughter of Bill and Carol Henry, 94 North Main Street, won a gold medal with the synchronized swimming team at the U.S. Olympic Sports Festival in Los Angeles July 21.

Henry was one of eight competing on the synchronized swimming team for the West from July 12 to 14 at the facility used for the 1984 Olympic Games. Synchronized swimming was chosen as one of the sports to be televised by ESPN.

Ann swims and attends college in Santa Clara, California. This past April she qualified for the last of three phases for the U.S. National Team. Out of the 70 swimmers who had qualified to compete in the trials, there were 24 who made it through the first two figure competitions held at the end of the U.S. Nationals. In May these 24 women went on to the University of Arizona in Tucson for routine competition and medical testing.

Henry now has a shot at qualifying for the United State's synchronized swimming team at the 1992 Olympics in Barcelona, Spain.

CHS champs return to the hoop

By Peter Kasperowicz
Mariner correspondent

1988. Cohasset girls' basketball goes 25 and 1 for the season. The Skippers face 26-0 Frontier Regional in the state finals — and win. The town goes crazy. One of the smallest schools in the state, maybe the world, wins it all.

The banner is placed on the gym wall. A parting gift from the team? Perhaps. More likely, a symbol of achievement. Something for some freshman to look up at and wonder about. Something she and other players can shoot for in the future. A rebirth.

Last Sunday, that banner was missing from the wall. The school was painting the gym, it had to be mended, something or other. It didn't take long for seven old teammates to notice.

Sara Bishop, Amanda Church, Kristen Ellinger, Deb Hartley, Marge Murphy, Liz O'Leary and Cindy Spooner came to play last Sunday against the South East Regional girls' Bay State team.

The scrimmage meant a good practice for the Bay State team, coached by Jason Proodian. To the '88 champs the game meant much more. It meant remembering plays that were clouded by three years of not playing together. Four of the seven hadn't played at all for those three years.

While Proodian plotted against his former players, seven coachless Cohasset graduates discussed the keys to overcoming what was maybe their biggest challenge to date.

"They haven't played much together yet. We definitely have an advantage there."

"Keep it away from their center and we'll kill 'em."

"Your mother is here, Cindy."

"I know."

"Where am I gonna put my gum?"

Was it 6'6" Rara Wolters of Holliston that confused Cohasset into putting six women on the floor for the opening tip? "We were just going to see if they noticed," Liz O'Leary confided.

Marge Murphy had the honor of jumping against the omnipresent Wolters. "Way to go, Murph," the bench yelled as the Skippers ran their defense.

And so the game went. Airballs were met with giggles. Substitutions were handled by the bench by calling out, "Is anyone tired yet?" Shots that somehow rattled in were gaped and laughed at. Anyone who made both foul shots was a hoop goddess. Spooner even gave advice to the Bay team during the game.

"I'd yell 'Look for the ball,' but they thought I was talking to my own team. I didn't care; what did I have to lose?"

Of course, no one had expected the home team to win. Not even the players. And so Cohasset played, without a championship banner staring down at them from the gym. They played without that symbol of hope, that proof of past glories and inspiration for future achievement. Suddenly, magically, they were in high school again, charting their own course through unknown waters.

"I was impressed," Proodian said after the Bay team's 94-67 victory. "Cohasset played better than it should have, considering the circumstances."

"It's weird, I wasn't even breathing heavy," Ellinger said afterwards.

mariner sports

"Yeah, well I heard you out there," Murphy shot back as the team laughed together. Of course, the joking around can only last so long. By the end of the game, the team was doing what it does best: setting new goals. Weekly practices was the first item on their agenda.

"How about 3 o'clock Sundays?"

"We just gotta get back to basics and we'll be good again."

"We'll play anyone, even guys."

Brian Pompeo of Cohasset (left) was recently honored at Belmont Hill School. Christopher Wadsworth, headmaster, announced the varsity sports awards for the spring season. Brian closed out the season with a .363 average. Brian will attend Colby College in the fall.

Flying Scot results

Steve Bartow and Jack Brister placed first in a race that took the fleet about a mile east of Minot's light. The second race was cancelled due to lack of time, mostly because it took too long to get out that far.

George Wey took second, solidifying his hold over first place for the season. Rick Swanborg's third added to his mid-season rally and moved him up a notch to eighth place.

Ray Kasperowicz holds onto second place for the season, but is feeling the heat from Bartow/Brister, who moved within two-tenths of a point last week. The Scots have now raced 12 times.

Leo's Tigers blister Quincy Raiders 6 to 3

Against Quincy, the Tigers' previously sputtering offense shifted into overdrive. Cohasset center Mike Reynolds churned four goals while Kevin Mulcahy and Matt Kramers scored one each. Tiger left wing Matt Kramers began the onslaught when he stuffed a Mulcahy/Murphy pass into the Quincy net for the first goal at 54 minutes. Nine minutes later, Kramers assisted Mike Reynolds on his first of four goals. Reynolds received an assist from Mulcahy, then soloed for another. Kevin Mulcahy scored at 17 minutes and Reynolds got his fourth at two minutes. Quincy's three goals were scored by Phil Glennon.

The Tigers were prepared for this victory. Veteran goaltender Jeff Stone was sharp from the opening faceoff. Cohasset's first line of Matt Kramers, Mike Reynolds, and John Murphy controlled the faceoffs while Kevin Mulcahy, Tim Conroy, Charlie Shields and John Kinchla played exceptional defense.

Quincy's first line was large, talented and physical. Cohasset countered them with Reynold's speed, Kramers precision passing and Murphy's strength in the corners and along the boards.

Cohasset 12th grader John Murphy, 10th grader Mike Riley and 8th grader Chris McKenna proved to be pivotal players in this contest. All three boys gave solid penalty killing efforts chasing and backchecking the puck and pressuring Quincy. All three played unselfishly and gave 100 plus percent.

Midway through the contest, Riley replaced John Murphy on the Reynolds/Kramers line. Murphy then rotated through the lineup, strengthening the Dan DeMichele/Matt Graves line, the Brendan Kinchla, Anthony Wigmore, Chris McKenna and Mike Shields lines.

With 15 minutes left to play, right wing Dan DeMichele limped off the ice. Dan's positive play along the boards had helped to keep Quincy in check. Murphy then centered between left wing 10th grader Matt Graves and rugged right wing 9th grader Anthony Wigmore. Anthony took several hard checks from Quincy's more experienced first line, but with John Murphy beside him, he gave a varsity level performance. Anthony kept his head up and made the short accurate passes necessary to move the puck beyond the Cohasset blue line. Matt Graves skated his wing very well. He stayed in position and neutralized Quincy on his side of the ice.

Matt Graves and 9th grader Brendan Kinchla are emerging as potent left wings. Both boys were able to spring free on long passes. They now need to develop upper body strength to complement their speed.

Several Cohasset players had near misses against Quincy. Mike Shields, Mike Riley, Chris McKenna, Charlie Shields and John Kinchla all got within range. Quincy also had some post ringers against goalie Jeff Stone. But the Cohasset defense held firm.

Penalties could have been a factor in this game. Cohasset received six penalties for a total of nine minutes while Quincy only served six minutes. Tim Conroy served three minutes for interference and roughing. John Murphy served three minutes for interference. Matt Kramers was penalized a minute thirty seconds for slashing and Charlie Shields served a minute thirty seconds for improper verbiage. Fortunately, Cohasset's penalty killers held the fort.

Missing Tigers included Jeff Tosi, Chuck Endris, Charlie Smith, Pat Reynolds and Ryan Cibelli.

Cohasset's record is now two wins and two losses with 16 goals scored against 15 for their opponents.

The Tigers next play Blue Hills Tech on Friday, July 19 at 7:40 p.m. at Pilgrim Arena. The team then practices at Milliken Field on Wednesday, July 24 at 7:20 p.m. A parents' meeting for all Junior High School age players will be held at the Deer Hill School Cafeteria on Thursday, July 25 at 8 p.m. The team then plays Milton on Friday, July 26 at Pilgrim at 7:40 p.m.

The Tigers wish to thank the Fiori family, owners of Leo's Exxon on Route 3A, Cohasset for their sponsorship of the club. Their enthusiasm for the team is much appreciated.

The Tigers also wish to thank Steve Wigmore and the Veteran's Post for their support throughout the season.

NOTE

The last Old Timers' game of the summer will be held on Wednesday, July 31 at Pilgrim Arena, Hingham at 7:20 p.m.

Any hockey-playing adult attired in proper equipment is welcome to play. The cost is $10. The first 14 players and goalie to call John Kinchla at 383-6851 will be eligible to play.

Camp is offered four weeks in August starting August 6 through 9 from 9 a.m. to noon at a cost of $39 per week. Call 383-0088 to register.

Due to its popularity, another Boys Night Out has been added to the summer program. This is for boys age seven through 11 years and is scheduled for a new time, 5 to 7 p.m. on Friday, July 19. Boys will be participating in gymnastics, obstacle courses, contests, and bowling. Prizes and snacks are included. Cost of this program is $12. Participation is limited and must be pre-registered.

The Babysitting Course starts Wednesday, July 10 and runs for four weeks. This program stresses a better understanding of young children and their care and safety along with other practical tips and first aid procedures.

For Women Only: Taking Financial Control, offers women a thorough overview of money management and financial planning. Topics include professional portfolio management, investment philosophies, tax strategies and estate planning principles. This class meets on Thursday evenings from 7 to 8:30 p.m. and started July 11.

A Teen Dance will be held at the Center on Friday evening, July 26, from 7:30 to 10:30 p.m. Teens in grades seven through nine are invited to participate. The price is $5 at the door.

Christmas in July

The Cohasset Village Fair committee is accepting any donations for the December 7 fair. If you have "hidden treasures," jars, beads, etc. please call your church representative or Georgine Butman at 383-2528 or Rose Kierce.

Society Museums are open

The Cohasset Historical Society's two summer museums at Cohasset center have opened their summer season. The Maritime Museum and Capt. John Wilson House will be open to the public each afternoon except Mondays through the end of September.

At the Capt. Wilson House the Society's Costume Committee currently is showing their second special exhibit of the summer. A display of old white dresses for adult and child's wear, fans, shoes, quilts and assorted textiles will be featured at the Wilson House for the next four weeks. The 1810 Sea Captain's house is furnished as a 19th Century Cohasset home, with furniture, household artifacts, dolls, toys and artworks originally found in early houses of the town.

Also at Cohasset center, the Society's Maritime Museum features unique collections of maritime-related artifacts, models, ship carvings, charts, documents and pictures from the early years of the town. For nearly two centuries Cohasset was a seafaring community, with fishing, mercantile trade and shipbuilding being the largest of the town's non-agricultural industries. The "Age of Sail" is portrayed at the Maritime Museum. Also on display at the museum is a large general collection of general historical material from early Cohasset. Admission to the Historical Society's two museums is free. Hours are 1:30 to 4:30 p.m.

The Society can be reached at 383-6930.

Volunteers needed

The American Red Cross is in need of volunteers to work at the Weymouth Landing office.

If you are someone who has good typing skills, or enjoys working on a computer, we can use your help a few hours a week.

For more information, please call Jeanne Stone, Volunteer Coordinator at 331-6999.

Islands Children's Fest

Saturday, July 20 and Sunday, July 21 the Boston Harbor Islands State Park will have its annual Children's Festival. Bumpkin, Grape, and Gallops Islands along with Georges, Peddocks and Lovells Island will have crafts, games and storytelling for young and old.

To enjoy the festival, Park Supervisor, Al Kenney suggests visitors make it a full day adventure. Visitors should take the 10 a.m. boat from either Long Wharf in Boston or the Hingham Shipyard in Hingham ($5 for adults, $3.50 for children). The 45-minute boat ride goes to Georges Island where you can visit Fort Warren.

Hop on the Water Taxi ($2 adults, $1 children) to take you to another island. Boats back to Boston leave as late as 4:45 p.m. and 5:45 p.m. The last boat to Hingham is at 4:15 p.m.

Pack a picnic lunch with plenty to drink (drinking water available on Georges Island only) dress in layers and wear comfortable shoes.

The Children's Festival is presented by the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Management and the Metropolitan District Commission Island Rangers.

CHS gains programs & shakeup

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

The department heads at the high school will be shaken up — due to a vote of the school committee.

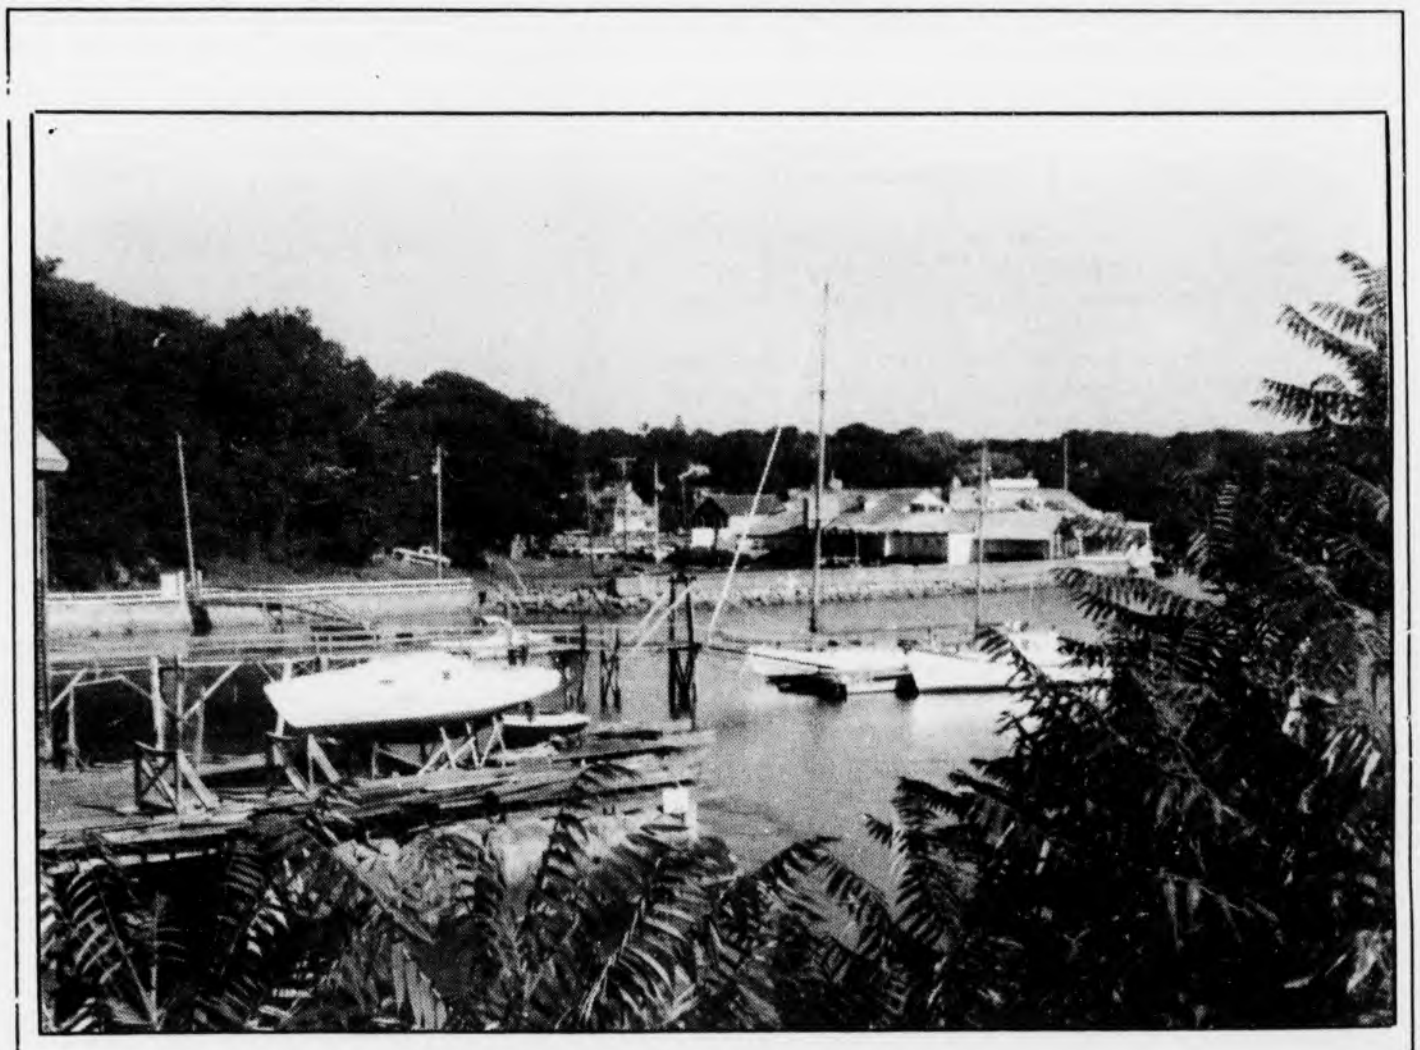
But not for the coming school year.

Actually the coming year looks good for the high school program as the school system plans to restore industrial arts, home economics, business education and physical education cuts. The restoration will not change the budget. The money is available due to retirements of teachers at the top of the scale who will be replaced.

Industrial arts was a half-time position — this year it will be full time. Business education is up to 1.4 teachers. Home economics to .8, and the change in physical education will add a halftime position, freeing Mike Gill to go back to teaching health.

This past year, home economics was staffed at 50 percent and business education, one teacher.

On the issue of department chairmen, the committee voted four to one (with Ralph Kidder opposed) to accept the recommendation of the school administration for the appointments for this year.



This means Michael Gill, Sam Erbe, Kearin Dunn, William Kite, Patricia Keenan will continue as department chairmen for the coming school year.

Also appointed for extra pay assignments were: Florence Ely as yearbook advisor and Thomas O'Neill as debate advisor.

The head of the guidance department, Jack Leary, is under a separate contract and so not effected.

School Committeeman J. Russell Reidy opened the Success, the old fashioned way

By Frank Falacci
Special to the Mariner

Whatever happened to the American Dream, the rags to riches story where hard work took you to the top through hard times? It seems the only dream one reads about today is the lucky lottery winner, the hostile raider or those chosen athletes who sign super contracts. But the little guy, the guy who started off in the Great Depression Era, as a kid working off the sidewalk watching the cars roll by...What of him? Are there any old-fashion American Dreams like that left to tell about in 1991?

Surely, The Dream lives, somewhere...

Amazingly, it does, right here in the Hub of the Universe and ironically, the story begins and ends inside The Boston Globe, arguably the biggest, lil' old storyteller in New England. This one has all the right stuff for the American success story as we know it...Work, work, work and sacrifice!

John P. Giuggio did it the old fashioned way. Born eight months and days after the bubble burst on Wall Street October 29, 1929, America was awash in unemployment and despair. You could buy a newspaper for a penny then, maybe two cents in some places. Dinner in a hashhouse cost 10 or 15 cents and a ferry ride from the North End waterfront over to East Boston was cheaper than the famed Statton Island ferry in New York, one cent as against a nickel. Neighborhoods were tight, little islands, protective of their own, proud of their heritage. This was the world that greeted young Giuggio growing up in West Roxbury.

Who's John Giuggio you ask..? His name is seen every day by thousands of readers, probably overlooked by just as many thousands, as they pore over the editorial pages of The Boston Globe. When Giuggio's name was first stamped onto the Globe masthead

New school choice law may impact Cohasset

(Editor's note: the Cohasset school committee met Monday, July 22, but did not make a decision on the issue of school choice. A school committee vote is required for participation in the part of the plan that deals with accepting out of town students. The issue will be discussed in August — but there is already one student on the list for consideration.)

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

Could Cohasset schools accept ten kids from a neighboring town and be $50,000 better off?

Yes, says William J. Crowley, executive assistant to the commissioner of education.

Starting in September, school districts across the state can accept students from other towns at no cost to them or to the students involved.

Per-pupil costs — established by a state formula which determines how much each town spends per student — will be deducted from the sending town's Chapter 70 funds and given to the receiving school district, Crowley said

Cohasset spends about $5,000 per regular day pupil.

The latest cost figure, certified by the state is not yet available, but for the 1989 school year, Cohasset spent $4,753, according to School Supt. Stephen Hart. Hart wants to see the state regulations in print before making a decision on the proigram.

His initial reation is that while the idea may benefit

Bowling 101 — Life in the fast lane

By Peter Kasperowicz
Mariner correspondent

Cohasset recreation is exploring territory beyond the Osgood playground, and the Community Center bowling lanes may never be the same again.

George Brook was minding the store when nine bowling fiends filed in last Thursday, led by counselors Rob Gavin and Chad Whitmari. "Well, this shouldn't be so bad," Brook said. "Sometimes we get twenty at once."

Five year old Scotty McArthur broke tradition by bowling in socks and occasionally tripping over the foul line. The foot fault rule was not rigidly enforced.

"Scotty's a pretty good bowler for his first time," observed Chris Carr, 7. Scotty was apparently pleased as well, giving high fives to his teammates after each turn.

Sean O'Neill, 7, was one of those rare bowlers who didn't roll the ball between his legs, but he began questioning his strategy despite his early lead. "I don't know. Everyone is bowling real good."

The middle lane was occupied by the Hurley clan: Kelly, five and a half; Terry, six and a half; and Morgan, who admitted only to being Terry's older sister.

The Hurley's were faced with a ball shortage early on, possibly due to Kelly's habit of rolling just hard enough to strand the ball in the middle of the lane. "There's no more balls," Kelly said. "They're all stuck in the alleys."

Terry's lead over Morgan prompted a debate over whether boys are better bowlers than girls. Becky Hardin, 7, overheard the discussion from the next lane over and gladly offered her views on the matter.

"Girls are better than boys." At everything? "No, not at everything, but at bowling."

Becky held the lead over her little sister Rachel, 5, and Kerry Anderson, 8. "Becky beat me last time," Kerry admitted. Rachel seemed content to let her sister win as long as there was plenty of soda and popcorn waiting for her at the bench.

It's no surprise that Kelly Hurley was soon seeking some sagely advice from Becky.

"I'm losing," Kelly frowned.

"That's cuz you're the littlest."

"Not in my family."

With that realization, Kelly got right back into her game after Morgan and Kerry explained that it's OK to bowl even when the balls are rolling back up the ramp

SAFE requests CHL spotter

SAFE recently called on the board of health to require Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL) to hire a spotter to screen out hazardous wastes which may enter the landfill.

The board is in the process of pushing the spotter question.

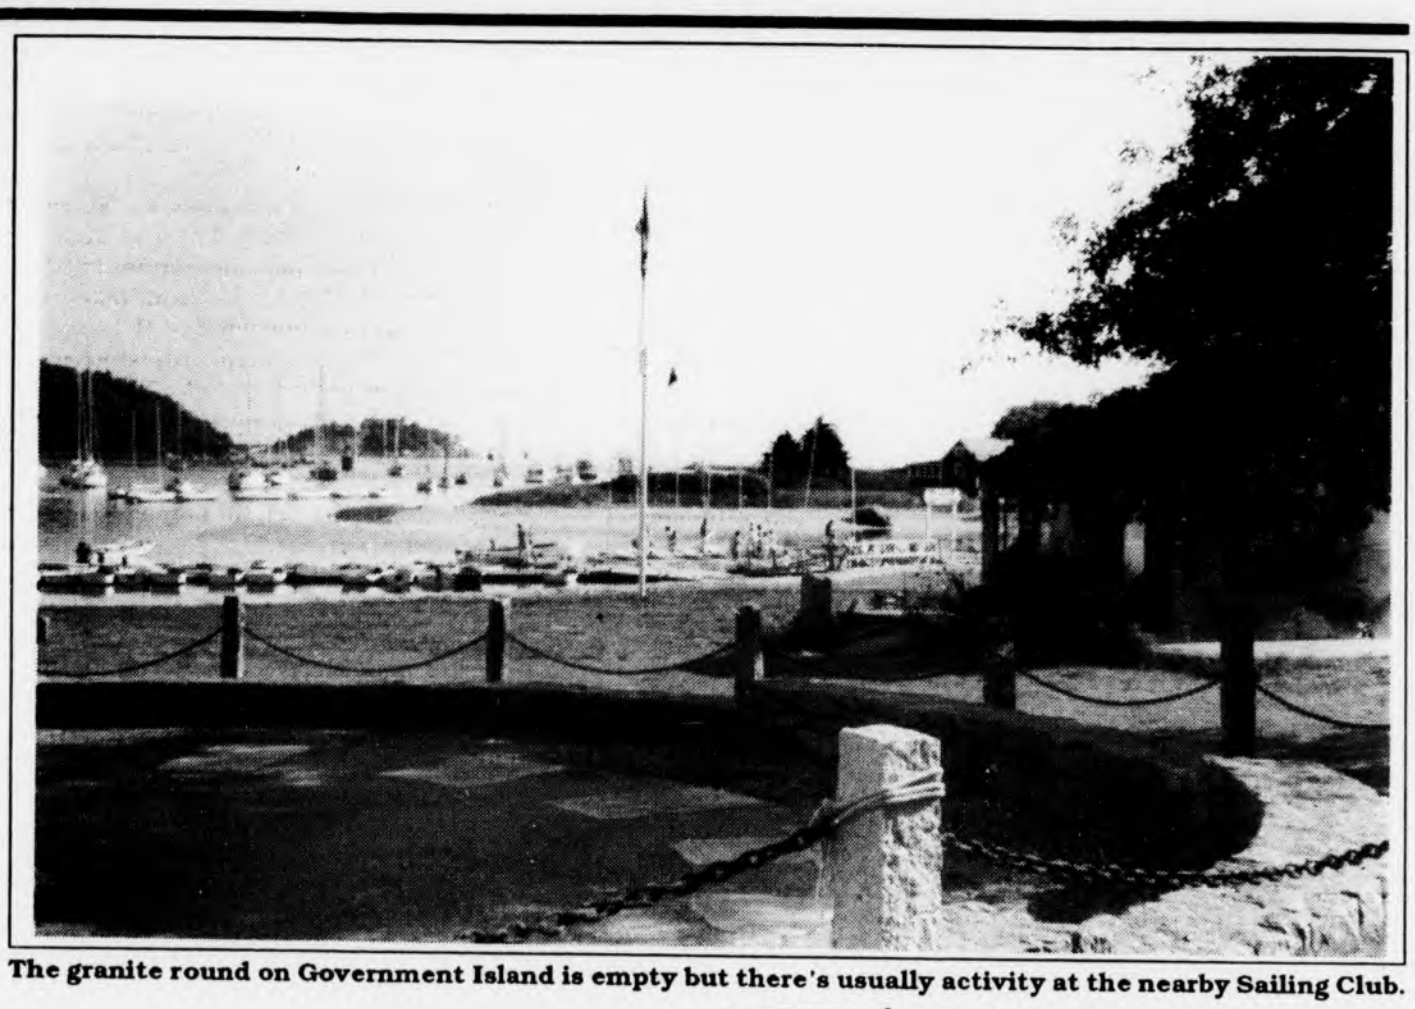
"A spotter is needed," said Alix White, President of SAFE. "Without a spotter, neither the town nor the owners of CHL will have any assurance that hazardous wastes are not being dumped at the landfill."

"The board of health, in 1986, appointed Mr. Paul Barry, who is the Vice President and operator of the landfill, as the spotter," said John McNabb Jr., Vice-President of SAFE. "This is unacceptable. It is the same as having no spotter."

"The board of health has put the fox in charge of the chicken coop," said McNabb. "How can they expect Mr. Barry, who receives a fee for every truckload of refuse, to turn away a truckload?"

"We call on the board of health to ask Mr. Barry for a report on how many times he has identified hazardous waste in a truckload, how many times a truckload has been refused because of hazardous wastes, and how such hazardous wastes have been disposed of," said McNabb.

"The board of health should require CHL to pay the town funds to enable the town to hire a part-time health agent to monitor wastes," said McNabb.



"At their June 11 meeting," said McNabb, "Mr. Barry said he would not cooperate with such conditions. The Board then asked Mr. Barry to ask his partners if they would agree, but did not give Mr. Barry a deadline to report back. We urge the board to require Mr. Barry to report back before their Aug. 13 meeting."

"The spotter issue is very important," said White, "and needs to be resolved. We urge the Board of Health to take expeditious, positive action on this issue."

School service days

Release days for the coming school year will decrease — and many of the teachers will have more options on what they want to learn.

School committee Monday accepted a school calendar and program for release days that calls for 12 release days for the elementary schools and 10 for the high school.

The granite round on Government Island is empty but there's usually activity at the nearby Sailing Club.

Last year there were 16 release days for the elementary schools and 13 for the high school.

The high school release days are: Sept. 19, Oct. 3, Oct. 24, Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 16, Feb. 6, March 19, April 9, May 7 and June 19.

The two elementary schools will have the same days as the high school for early release plus June 4 and Dec. 12.

The school committee accepted a lengthy report from a group of teachers who gave three days of their summer vacation to plan the inservice training and develop the schedule.

The committee includes: John Packard, Patricia Baker, Jean Free, Florence Ely, Betty Cisneros, Joseph Becker, Frank Deakin, Edward Leonard, Barbara Wells and Mike Gill. Guido Risi served as staff assistant for the committee.

Unwanted paper wasn't wasted

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

The hundreds of pounds of unwanted paper and books the Cohasset school department threw away last week were unusable, according to School Supt. Stephen Hart.

Critics plastered school officials with a dunce cap late last week when three truckloads of school supplies cleared out of the Osgood School were brought to a SEMASS incinerator in Rochester.

Principal Linda Whitney said there was a storage problem at the school because unusable supplies were taking up space.

She denied reports the school was wasting supplies and maintained everything that could have been salvaged, was saved.

She said most of the paper and books removed during the big haul were damaged beyond use.

"The primary problem with the materials is that they were very musty, mildewy and damp," she said. "It was really a mess.

"There were materials there that had been stored for 10 years, when you opened up some of the books dust just poured from them."

She said it took two custodians three trips in the school truck to the Cedar Street landfill to get rid of all the unwanted materials. Most of the loot went from the landfill, which couldn't handle all of it at its on site recycling center, to the SEMASS site where it will either be recycled or burned in an energy producing incinerator.

Whitney said throughout the school year teachers and aids were instructed to go into the storage area and take what they could use. She said many books, visual aids, and paper supplies were salvaged before the storage area was cleaned out.

Hart said he stands by Whitney, and agreed most of the dumped goods were unwanted.

"What can I say, some of the stuff in that storage room had been down there for more than 20 years," he said. "There were materials down there that had been damaged by water and mold."

Hart denied critic's charges that some of the paper was thrown out was because it was "the wrong color."

"It wasn't the color of the paper, it was the quality of the paper," he said. "If you wrote on it your pencil would go right through the paper it was so old."

He said some "handwriting paper," used to teach proper longhand, was thrown out for similar reasons.

Hart said an instructor told him the paper was improperly spaced and should not be used for the course. He said the school still would have tried to use it for another use, such as scrap paper, if it wasn't badly damaged.

He said the books and workbooks that were thrown out were either badly damaged or outdated.

He said a few years ago the school tried to find a buyer for some of the books and texts that were gathering dust, but no one wanted them.

Both Hart and Whitney deny published reports that three tons of material was carted off.

"I can't believe that there was that much," he said, adding that the storage area is too small to hold three tons.

Hart said claims the school department recklessly threw out materials are unfounded. He said an inventory of the paper and books that were saved, many of which were still water damaged, shows care was taken to separate the usable from the unusable.

Hart said some of the salvaged material will be given to the Cohasset Rotary Club which will ship it to needy schools in the Philippines.

He pointed out that the town's recycling center acepts only white paper and newsprint.

Hart said schools are constantly under scrutiny, and when they throw away items that are no longer usable, people invariably jump in to say they are wasting. He said this attitude is partly to blame as the reason the storage area had not been cleaned in so long.

"Part of the problem is you tend not to throw away stuff in schools for this very reason," he said.

John Denver delights Music Circus crowd

By Bruce Compton
Special to the Mariner

John Denver delighted a capacity crowd at the South Shore Music Circus July 18, performing a repertoire of popular classics, love ballads, and consciousness-raisers from his 22 certified gold albums.

The warm audience got to know him as the self-proclaimed "All-American Boy" who worked on a tractor in Oklahoma and on a wheat harvest from Texas to the Dakotas; a chaser at a logging campaign in Washington state; and the boy who ran away from home once, and "ran away from love many times." Denver opened the show with the soft ballad, "A Boy From the Country," then proceeded to yodel his way through "Rocky Mountain High" to a huge ovation. The audience joined in, clapping along to the up-tempo "Grandma's Featherbed." Relating the farmhouse circumstances which brought about the writing of the song, he said, "My father was the first son of eleven children. There were two girls and nine boys in that house. When we went back on vacations there would be more cousins than I could even count, and every evening we'd be sitting around the fire in the kitchen telling stories, and the little kids would head up to Grandma's bed upstairs. There would be nights when there would be thirteen or fourteen kids in there, a couple of dogs, cat — I never will forget the night we had a pig in there..."

"Country Roads," enjoying its twentieth anniversary as a number one hit record last week, elicited considerable response, as did the standard "Back Home Again." A selection from the "Higher Ground" album, "Home-Grown Tomatoes," turned into an instant hand-clapper. / What would life be like without home-grown tomatoes / there's only one thing that money can't buy / That's true love and home-grown tomatoes.

After a couple of obvious fretboard miscues on this one, Denver was prompted to say, "I'm not known for my guitar playing."

He was able to tickle the crowd with "Saturday Night in Toledo Ohio." / you ask how I know of Toledo Ohio / well I spent a week there one day / they've dozens of things to dazzle your eyes / go visit the bakery and watch the bugs rise.

Denver followed this up with the popular "Follow Me." He dedicated the anti-abortion song "I Want to Live" to the children all over the world. "There is a birthright for every baby," he said.

"I think the way a song like that got to be possible to come out of me," he explained, "happened out of my joining the Chad Mitchell Trio in the sixties. That is where I first became socially and politically aware. And it's true that a lot of the satyrical material that the Mitchell Trio did — sometimes songs which were incredibly funny — oftentimes got us into a great deal of trouble. Songs like the "I Was Not a Nazi Polka" or "Draft Dodger Rag."

Denver co-wrote "Running in the Politics Game" with Tom Paxton. It's about Gary Hart, and it was no accident that Denver performed it in the same key as"Rocky Mountain High," much to the pleasure of the howling audience.

The pretty title cut from "Rhymes and Reasons" was a crowd-pleaser, and before Denver left for a brief intermission "to put on some dry clothes, he performed "Bells of Brimley" on a twelve-string guitar. Working effective harmonics technique, he showed some fine guitar-playing, producing a church-bell effect that the song's author Pete Seeger intended.

Denver opened the second set with "Let This Be A Voice" before Boston's Artari String Quartet joined him for a series of songs beginning with "I'm Sorry." The violins were very effective on "Breezes in Old Shanghai." Denver pinpointed the source of his inspiration for the song.

"In 1984 I was in China visiting Shanghai, and Shanghai in July is hotter and more humid than it is here. The Yangtze River runs through Shanghai, all across that magnificent country, and empties out into the Pacific Ocean. There's a breeze that comes off the river every afternoon that's a blessing on the day. It was my first wife Annie's and my fifteenth wedding anniversary, and we had been separated for some time at that point. I had found myself very homesick. I called her up and she had been out on a hike that day with some of our friends, which was one of our favorite things to do in the Rocky Mountains, and she had been thinking of me, too. She mentioned that during the hike she had looked up and she had seen the moon up there and she had wondered if it was the same moon that I saw over China. I said that it was probably the same one. When I got off the phone after a wonderful conversation, I walked around Shanghai sort of in a stupor and wrote the song."

Denver invited the ladies to sing along to a part of "Fly Away," though many either weren't interested in joining in or did not know the words. The romantic "Our Time Has Just Begun," from Denver's latest album, "The Flower That Shattered the Stone," had the audience entranced, while another song from the same album, "Different Directions," /when you are moving in different directions / true love will have to wait / had the crowd roaring in approval.

Denver went to the piano for the thought-provoking "For the Rest of My Life" and for "The Only Dream I Know," in which he exhibited terrific vocal range.

The violins were especially effective in the seductive "Annie's Song" from the "Perhaps Love" album. Denver called "Potter's Wheel" also from the new album and written by Bill Danoff, who co-wrote "Take Me Home, Country Roads," a very, very gloomy song, but it was well-received, strange and haunting and out-of-character as it was.

"I've always been very much in favor of support of preventive measures," he said. And these days what they're saying about our future is that within the next decade — these ten years before the turn of the century — you and I are going to determine whether or not this earth remains inhabitable by higher life forms such as human beings. We are an endangered species."

Denver offered a poem about prevention entitled "The Ambulance Down in the Valley." He suggested that the remedy to a problem is in the cause, not in the continued treatment of effect.

/ some said put a fence round the edge of the cliff /
/ others — an ambulance in the valley /

Denver followed the poem up with the title cut from "Poems, Prayers, and Promises." The enthusiasm reached fever pitch when Denver's eyeballs rolled back in their sockets as he yodeled away "Calypso" from the "Windsong" album. He had delivered the audience finally to ecstacy, and they showed their approval with a long, enthusiastic standing ovation.

One of the top five recording artists in sales history of the music industry, Denver has shown Cohasset that he still loves the mountains and the stars, to laugh and to be with friends, to sing for you, and to be an "All-American Boy."

Executive session of Selectmen

Selectmen present: Martha K. Gjesteby, Jane O. Goedecke, Diana D. Kornet, Rocco F. Laugelle, Edwin H. Tebbetts

Others present: Gregory J. Doyon - Exec. Secretary, Joyce D. Studley - Admin. Secretary.

The meeting was convened at 10:47 p.m.

Discussion of negotiations re making of film "Housesitter." Mr. Doyon stated that he and Mrs. Goedecke had met with Michael Williams, Location Manager for the film "Housesitter", and reported that initially it had been publicized that in connection with making the movie a house was to be built in Cohasset; however, it has been decided to build the house in Concord. Due to this, the number of days of filming has been reduced to six from eight. Mr. Williams' latest response arrived today and he has cut down the filming schedule to four days, plus two to be determined. They are planning to film around the Common and downtown area.

Mrs. Goedecke said it had been expected Williams would make a written proposal for $20,000, and he is now proposing $1,500 a day. She said it will also be necessary to have an itemization of the work to be done in the village. Williams was asked to paint the building on the corner of Ripley Road and he said he would. He now says in today's letter that he will "fix it up." Mr. Doyon added that he thought there was a commitment to paint the Independence Building as well, which is not included.

Mrs. Goedecke reported that the fee for use of the Town Hall Auditorium is $200 a day for casting, with which Mr. Williams agreed.

The Board discussed the matter of remuneration for allowing the filming, following which it was decided that Mr. Doyon and Mrs. Goedecke should continue negotiations.

Motion of Mrs. Kornet to adjourn.

Second by Mrs. Gjesteby.

Vote 5 - O in favor, none opposed. Mrs. Gjesteby - Aye, Mrs. Goedecke - Aye, Mrs. Kornet - Aye, Mr. Laugelle - Aye, Mr Tebbetts - Aye.

Cohasset bridge gaining fame

By Peter Kasperowicz
Mariner correspondent

They come from miles away. Some of them live in other states, but they still travel to Cohasset, maybe even twice a week. They have to. Where else are they going to go kayaking?

'The only other decent place is Manchester," says Sterling Bouxman of Stoughton. "Most people travel 60-80 miles to come here." Sterling claims that Cohasset is the only place to kayak within route 495.

Ted Hickey of Acton has been kayaking for 10 years and still comes to Cohasset twice a week. Dave Kilimnik of Newton brought his friend John, a newcomer to the sport from Arlington.

"I 'm going to get slammed," John said, who had practiced for a few weeks in the still waters of Walden Pond.

Neil Johnson of Natick and Woody Dugan of Portsmouth, N.H. came to ride the rapids with their companions. After estimating the incoming tide, they waited for a "hole" to form in the water.

A hole is formed when the cascading water falls so hard and fast that it causes a deep impression in the water . If it's deep enough, water from downstream gets sucked in, cancelling the current from the tide.

"Basically, there's no current there, and you can just paddle in and sit there without much moving around," Sterling said.

Twenty minutes later, the hole had arrived. While Ted gave pointers on how to ride the strange wave, others explained how to bail out the kayak after a bad swamping.

"Kayaks have these inflatable air bags that help push the water out," Woody said. "They also help keep the boat balanced."

John received hoots and whistles after slowly getting used to rolling in moving water. Even Woody got his nose plugs out after experiencing his first saltwater roll.

Success, the old fashioned way . . .

somewhere in the '70s, it served as a trailblazer. It was a first, the only personage other than the traditional Taylor ownership signatory to appear on the business side of the nameplate. Taylors, as in Charles H, William 0., Wm. Davis, John I. and William 0. again, along with the editorial Winships, Laurence L. and Tom, pere et fil.

John Giuggio..? In 1982 he became President and Chief Operating Officer of both the Globe Newspaper Company and its parent company, Affiliated Publications, following a long, steady climb up the corporate ladder. His success ran in tandem with the Globe's in surmounting its Boston competition over the past three decades. John Giuggio earned his room at the top, the old fashioned way. And with little fanfare.

His route to the executive offices at Morrissey Boulevard started on the streets, as a newsboy, eventually landing a coveted stand in front of St. Theresa's Church on Sundays in West Roxbury. It was a spot he would keep through boyhood and beyond as a young man in his thirties. His future, like his father's, a deliveryman for the Globe's distribution subsidiary, was linked to the newspaper.

At 15, as World War II concluded, he signed on as a messenger at the Globe, running errands and occasionally carrying equipment for photographers. The extra money earned would help him through Boston College High School, ease the tuition burden for his parents. A night job taking paid death notices at the Globe's offices on Washington Street provided him with financial aid after enrolling at Boston College.

His career with the Globe seemed fated..During his senior year at Boston College, a permanent job opening became available in the classified advertising department. Giuggio wasted little time in seizing what he considered opportunity. He juggled his hours, actually reversed them, so that he worked full-time days as a Globe ad salesman; attended classes at night until graduation.

It was 1951. President Harry S. Truman struggled with the Korean War. Ahead though, was the peace in our time promised by Dwight D. Eisenhower. Eight years of national calm but not on Boston's Newspaper Row. There were too many newspapers. The rich and powerful Herald Traveler held the lion's share of advertising lineage. The Post commanded strong circulation figures. Street sales boosted Record American revenue. Somewhere in this cold war deployment sat the Globe, neither weak nor potent, almost countryfied in big city competition. This would change with the hiring of people like Giuggio.

The Globe was mobilizing for a major offensive in the Fifties. The first battlefront would be through classified ads, the soft underbelly of the other papers. Giuggio began work under innovative manager, Andrew Dazzi. He recalls eleven salesmen manning telephones, taking to the road by automobile, in any weather, for on-site calls to car dealers and real estate offices.

"When we finally convinced a Wellesley realtor to use the Globe," said Giuggio. "We felt that was a turning point." A Globe editorial staffer remembers a youthful Giuggio sitting inside a windowed box office in the paper's entrance, selling what was promoted then as "cash ads." People were encouraged to step in off the street and for one dollar, run a classified ad. The cash ad did two things instantly. It provided a cash flow when money was hard to come by...billing costs were cut dramatically. The cash ad and the classified staff were largely credited with boosting the old, stoddy Globe into contention with its rivals, and today ranks among the top five newspapers nationally in classified ad lineage.

Giuggio also was attaining new heights. After his promotion as classified advertising manager in 1965, he was named business manager four years later. More important, he was now recognized throughout the industry, as the "strong right arm" of William 0. Taylor, who was preparing to take over the publishing helm from his father, William Davis Taylor. "I guess we were considered the dual problem solvers," noted a reserved Giuggio. "We got along from the very beginning...I came into the business side a couple of years after Bill."

Bill Taylor portrays Giuggio as "..a wonderful friend, very capable and extremely loyal." Neither, however, appeared desirous of singling anyone, editorial or business, as the guiding hand responsible for the Globe's rise over former adversaries. "It wouldn't be fair, to name even a few," said Taylor.

Giuggio parried the question of whether former editor Tom Winship was the major influence who transformed the paper's editorial product during the '60s and '70s..."How can I answer that after you have mentioned other editors like Al Haviland, the Monahans, Charlie Merrill, and Tom's father, Laurance L. Winship."

observed Giuggio. "Remember, these other people made it possible for Tom to do what he did...It took the work of a lot of people to put the Globe where it is today."

As of today's edition, Giuggio's name, as vice chairman of the Globe's board of directors, remains high on the masthead, the closest to Bill Taylor's. He is also president of Affiliated Publications. His large, sunlit office is a far cry from the newsstand he once manned on the sidewalk in front of St. Theresa's. His salary is presumed well into six figures. A Giuggio "must", the traditional business request for editorial space, is never ignored. His marriage was made in classified, marrying the former Barbara Savage when both were employed in the Classified Ad Department. Home for the Giuggios and their four children is now Cohasset.

Are America's streets paved with gold? No, but the American Dream, old fashioned or new-fangled, can still be found, sometimes right before your eyes, when you read the morning paper!

Luxury tax sinking the boat business

By David McKee
Mariner staff

When it first emerged in the federal budget talks in 1990, the luxury tax on new boats looked like a tax even Robin Hood would have liked.

It was part of a plan that taxed the purchasers of items like expensive cars, fancy jewelry and private airplanes.

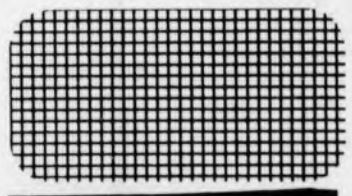
The tax on boats is equal to ten percent of the amount above $100,000 that is used to purchase a new boat.

Many thought this was a way to finally have the wealthy pay their fair share of taxes and help reduce the federal deficit.

But one year after the luxury tax on boats was put into the effect, the intended results have boomeranged.

The boating industry, already slowed by the sluggish economy, has had massive closings and cutbacks with thousands of working people losing their jobs all over New England.

As for the wealthy purchasers of new boats, they have held off buying in anticipation of a repeal of the tax that might not be coming.



And as for the big money to be raised through the tax for the federal deficit, the Department of Treasury estimates the gross revenue from the boat tax in 1991 will be less than $3 million.

"The amount raised by the tax is peanuts," said U.S. Rep Gerry Studds, D-Cohasset, who is working on repealing the tax on boats.

"But the hardships created for those in the boat-building and related industries are real. The burden of this tax is not falling on those who can afford to purchase expensive boats; it is falling, instead, on the working people who build boats that are no longer being sold."

The effects are hitting very close to home.

• I had a nice chat with Ken Coleman last week, what a fascinating man, and what an interesting life he leads. His most recent award is really a special one, he is going to be named to the Sports Media Association of Cleveland and the Ohio Hall of Fame. As many of you may know, Ken was chosen Ohio Sportscaster nine years in a row. Anyway, on Monday, Sept. 16, he will be named to the Hall of Fame. And there's more folks, his son, Casey Coleman will be presenting him the award...Casey is the TV Anchor in Cleveland. Ken won't have time for a long visit with his son, he has to be back the following weekend to begin another season of broadcasting Harvard University's Football games. Busy man.

• Two big birthdays are approaching next week...our retired police chief, Randy Feola, is celebrating the year after the big year (I'll let you all guess what that is). Randy is as busy as ever, though we don't know if he still totes a lollipop behind his ear. We do miss him around the South Shore Music Circus though. Come on up[and get your birthday ice cream Randy, it would be an honor to serve you again.

• The other big birthday that will be celebrated on the 29th will be in honor of the big man in my life, Clark, who will be fifty. That's fifty years of being a great guy, one who gives his all and goes out of his way to help others. Have a wonderful big day, and here's to the next fifty, may they be even better.

•Finally, a belated birthday wish to "Doc Skinna," Joe Laugelle. Here's hoping you had a wonderful day and that all of your gang at SSMC treated you well. You are a gem, Joe.

• Here's a Gatorade toast to Arnie Reppucci and his boys and girls summer basketball camp. The forecast promises lots more hot weather, so don't work 'em too hard Arnie!

•Saw Mike "Mucker" McNeill around town last week, he looks great. Mike is now living in Texas, where he is teaching school. He says that he loves it, and we'll bet that the students all love him. In fact, he was leaving town early so that he could prepare for the coming year. That's dedication.

• We want to be sure to extend our sympathy to the family and friends of Lot Bates, who as most know died suddenly last week. Lot was always around town, very involved in local politics, and well liked by all. He was a nice man, and he will be missed.

• Even though it is July, and hot right now, there will come a time that we need to clean out...if you find anything that the Cohasset Village Fair committee can use, be it extra material, jars, beads, or any saleable item, please call Georgine Butman at 383-2528 or Rose Kierce. You can see why the fair is such a success every year, the committee has been hard at work for months already, and has lots more work to do before December 7.

• Allison Ludlow celebrated on the Cape, now that she is home we can wish her a belated happy birthday, and we do.

• A standing ovation is in order for Ann Henry, who won a gold medal with the synchronized swimming team at the U.S. Olympic Sports Festival. It took place in Los Angeles recently, and ESPN was there to televise it, so we can all see Ann in action. Ann's next big event will hopefully be in 1992 in the Olympics in Barcelona, Spain. Ann is the daughter of Bill and Carol Henry of 94 North Main Street.

• Michele Herman is one busy girl lately, she is going to be married in September to David Rourke. A handsome couple, they will have a long and happy future together. Good luck to two very nice people.

• I had a chance to go into the new bookstore in downtown Cohasset last week, and it is really nice. There is a big selection, but if you don't see it they can get it for you. Drop in and visit, lets remember to support our local stores.

• Saw Charlie DeSantis last week, looking as well as ever. He reports that all is well with his family, and most importantly, he is back doing what he loves best...flying. As Charlie says, if things are a little off for you right now, just wait a while, they will surely get better. He and Dee and their family are living proof of that.

•That's the news for this week, be sure to call me with yours. It isn't too hot to make a telephone call, right.

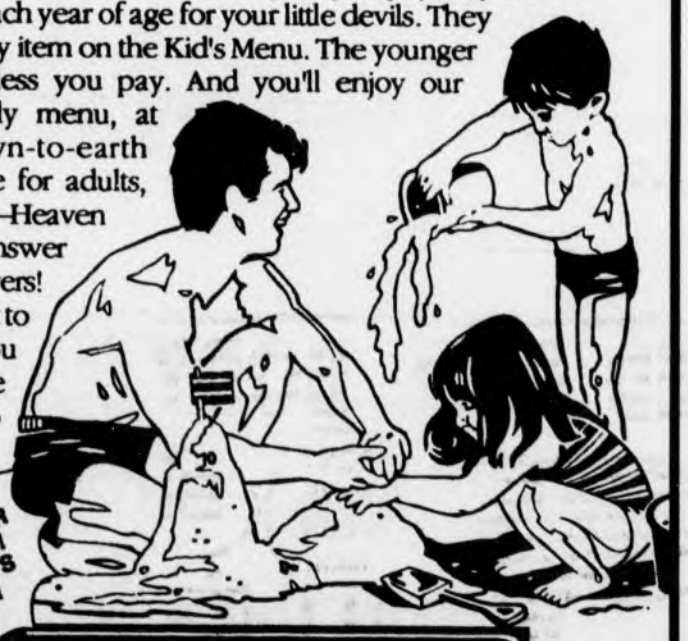
Meanwhile, Scotty had racked up nine points but was struggling with a mean hook that sent his shots to the left. Sean and Chris could only wonder at the solution. "It's like there's a magnet controlling where the ball goes."



In the end, girls and boys were about even (Sean had 49 and Becky had 47). These kids are great," Rob said as he and Chad let them up the long dusty trail to Osgood. High fives all around.

New school choice law may impact Cohasset

the school system, it is unfortunate the state has chosen to go this route. He said it will hurt school systems that are already in trouble.

The state aid will literally follow the student to the school-house door. Funds would be deposited in a revolving fund and not the town's general fund, he said.

"School choice could potentially affect every community in the Commonwealth," Crowley said about the new state law.

"Whether any school district chooses to participate is up to the local school committee.

"But no school committee can prevent a student from being admitted to a school in a neighboring community," he said.

FOSTERING COMPETITION

The theoretical reasoning behind the law is that by fostering competition, schools will be forced to improve or face losing students.

While Norwell Supt. Robert Bunnell sees school choice for a town like Norwell as having "more pluses than minuses" because the schools would attract students, he is philosophically opposed to the concept.

"Frankly I think it's a terrible idea," Bunnell said. "I believe in public education and making a good school system as good as it can be.

"But at the expense of other school systems? What possibly can this do to help the school system that sends the child?" Bunnell asked.

Hanover's Supt. Dr. Robert P. Fox sees "school choice as an opportunity for some school districts", but he is also concerned that districts which lose kids will be worse off.

"The good schools will get better and the worse schools will get worse," he said.

"What the leadership is doing — is washing its hands of education," he said. "They are simply shuffling the deck around without adding any money to it.

"It's sort of a cop out, a shell game," Fox said.

Crowley said that the commissioner's office is sending a memo to school departments across the state this week explaining the law.

"There are some question marks, we don't have all the answers yet," he said.

Bunnell is nonplussed that superintendents haven't received any of the regulations yet.

"I think it's outrageous that they can pass a law with implications in September and the press can call and get regulations but the superintendents don't have the faintest idea what's going on."

DISCRIMINATION

One of the big concerns from the department of education is the possibility of discrimination. Crowley said the law addresses this issue in detail.

"It touches everything imaginable," he said. Included in the department of education memo are cautions to the school committees concerning discrimination.

"We don't want any school districts to end up in court over this," he said.

For example, a receiving school district cannot refuse to take any special needs or bilingual students. The school district cannot set up a program to take only the athletically or academically talented.

Crowley said the department of education recommends that school districts which participate "be as specific as possible in identifying what space they have available."

For example, if the a school district has 20 third-grade seats and no fourth-grade seats, the school board should state that.

Once a student is admitted, the student is "almost considered as a resident student and should be treated just as the community's own students," Crowley said.

Crowley said that receiving schools can advertise for students (as long as the advertisements are non-discriminatory) in area newspapers if they chose to.

He explained that the cost of educating a special needs student, which can be considerably higher than those for a regular day pupil, will also follow the student from the sending district to the receiving one.

Participating school districts will be asked to file a report in October and another in April, and will be reimbursed for out-of-district student costs from the sending district's FY'92 Chapter 70 funds, Crowley said.

TRANSPORTATION

The new law does not address transportation.

"How the student gets from his or her home to the school is up to the parents," he said. But Crowley added that a study on "the transportation element" is due by August 1992.

Studies in the Midwest where school choice is available in some areas show that only about two percent of the student population take advantage of the program.

Crowley said school choice is not a panacea for problems with education.

"We (those in dept. of education) take an oath to uphold the laws of the Commonwealth," he said. "We will implement this law to the best of our ability and do so with some degree of enthusiasm and also of caution."

Crowley said what really matters in education is not school choice but "what happens between that teacher and that child."

Luxury tax sinking the boat business

Ed Lofgren, president of 3A Marine Service, Inc. of Hingham, said the tax is psychologically harmful.

"If someone has to pay $12,000 to the government for something that could be repealed, they will hold off," he said. "Even a rich guy will delay. But people are getting negative vibes from this whole thing. They are not going to buy things when they think they could lose their job tomorrow. And an extra tax on top of that is only making things worse."

Cohasset Marine has closed.

The Boston Whaler's Hanover facility, which employs 40 people, will be phased out by Jan. 1,.

There were recently 60 layoffs in the Rockland facility and 60 in the Edgewater, Fla. , facility.

"Nothing good has come from this tax," said Dan Vigneau, vice-president and general manager of the I.S.C. Marine Group, which manages the Green Harbor Marina in Marshfield and the Marina at James Landing in Scituate among five marinas in Massachusetts and Florida.

"Boat sales are off, unemployment has gone up and people are waiting for the tax to be repealed before they buy new boats. The new boats are just sitting at the manufacturers because no one is buying."

Vigneau estimated his company had an 80 percent decline in boat sales this year, with more than half of that being boats over $100,000.

Vigneau said only marinas and retailers that sell new boats for under $100,000 and have strong service departments are able to keep from going under during these tough times.

"The whole economy is hurting, not just the boating business," he said. "But used boats sales are up because they're not affected by the tax. And people are fixing the boats they have instead of buying new boats."

Frank Farrell, executive director of the Massachusetts Marine Traders Association, an organization of 110 boat retailers state-wide, said the tax has been a "total failure."

He estimated that boats sales are down 50 percent and that one third of all employees in the boating business have lost their jobs.

"The tax is devastating an already slow industry," he said. "It has accomplished nothing but close businesses and put people out of work. The money gained from the tax cannot compare to the money lost from business going under."

Farrell said Congressmen Barney Frank and Studds have been working hard to repeal the tax, but he is not optimistic about any changes.

"We've gotten tremendous support especially since they've seen the impact on their districts," Farrell said. "But I'm not confident about any changes. It was originally proposed by the Republican leadership and we have not been getting any type of response from the Bush administration. We'll have to see what happens."

School choice? Or is it?

There is a new state program designed to allow students to select the school system of their choice.

The plan, developed by Gov. William Weld, may very well help a school system like Cohasset that runs a quality program with low class size. There is an economy in adding a student here or there.

The actual regulations have yet to be sent to the school systems. Indeed, some rules may not yet be cast in cement.

It seems the burden of transportation lies with the parent. That is no small burden.

Our school committee has yet to decide whether it may opt to accept out of town students. The decision may very well be made at the August meeting, now scheduled for Thursday, Aug. 15, at the high school.

Then again, the agenda isn't set. The school committee may choose to wait.

There is no discrimination allowed should a system opt into the program. Students from Hull, Boston and Rockland would probably be more likely to seek out-of-town placements than students from Hingham.

Special education money would follow a student, just as the per pupil cost would be used as the tuition figure for other students.

It sounds as if there are quite a few economic and social advantages for a town like Cohasset. The mix of students would widen. New money would flow into the school system.

We disagree with the system. We agree with critics who say the urban schools, the schools already in financial trouble, will suffer from the school choice plan.

Truly poor students won't be able to use the plan because of the transportation problem.

It's time for the state to begin to live up to its responsibility to take on more of the cost of education.

This is not the way the state should act.

Yet given the fact that the system exists, we suggest the school system give it a try.

We do need the tuition money. Boycotting the plan will have little impact on the education of poor students. It will only mean a tougher budget for our town.

Shop locally

Let's all do our part to jump start the economy. And let the action begin here. Right in town.

The Cohasset merchants are a good bunch of people. They can use our small and large contributions towards ending the recession.

Remember these are the people who organized the Harborfest activities as a way of putting more fun into the community. The Cohasset Chamber of Commerce led the way in terms of work.

There are more than 200 businesses in town.

When local businesses do well, there are jobs in town for our children.

When local businesses do well, they give back to the community in many ways — they donate time and money to local causes. They pay local taxes.

So buy locally and help the community.

Midge trapper takes issue with caption

To the Editor:

The caption under the picture of Straits Pond on page 2 of your July 11 issue leaves an impression which should be corrected. Although the pond makes a pretty backdrop for motorists down this stretch of Jerusalem Road, those who live nearby know its problems all too well. This year those problems definitely include the "flying pests" you say are under control. While our midge problem so far this summer doesn't rival the trouble faced by residents near Scituate's Musquashicut Pond last year, this is certainly the worst summer for insects around Straits Pond in the past several years. Consider this: on a recent night using plastic sheeting coated with Tanglefoot I trapped (by statistical estimate) 69,000 midges between dusk and dawn. Imagine forty midges per square inch trapped on the wall of a freshly painted house. I think you will agree that this is not a situation that can be considered "under control."

The Cohasset Straits Pond Committee has been and will be working with the Conservation Commissions of Cohasset and Hull to understand the many interrelated problems of the pond. We would welcome the help and support of all interested citizens.

Sincerely,
Anson Whealler

Reader takes Mont to task

To the Editor:

Was your staff member Joseph Mont at the same town meeting I was on June 26? Although the advisory committee did their part in advising the residents to not sell the Bates Building to Habitat for Humanity for a buck, the residents did not accept that advice and voted a non-binding resolution to indeed sell the building for a buck to the worthy group.

I subscribe to your paper to get accurate local news. You've demonstrated that I can't count on that.

Sincerely,
Martha Charter

Harborfest produced success and great fun

To the Editor:

The Harborfest Steering Committee wishes to offer our thanks to all who participated in Harborfest. We hope that you had as much fun as we did.

Particular thanks to those organizations who contributed funds to start the ball rolling. We received donations from The Chamber of Commerce, The Community Center, Boy Scouts of America Troop 28 and The Cohasset Boosters Club. And the folks who participated in the Chowder Festival did a great job. The contestants were The Red Lion, The Chart House, Kimball's By The Sea, Village Gourmet, With Richard, Bob Pattison's Clambakes and Stars Restaurant. The winner of the "coveted" Cohasset Clam Award was Stars restaurant but everyone who was there was a winner.

Thanks also go to The Rotary and The Social Service League for running the Pancake Breakfast and the Chowder Festival and to The Council on Aging and The Veterans of Foreign Wars for their help with these events. Thanks go to Rik Tinory, "High Tension", the members of the CHS Class of 1992 who set up the stage and ran the Water Games, Hub Shipping, Radio Shack, E. Sestito Florist, Hingham Lumber, Good Sport, Cohasset Savings Bank, The American Legion, The Clergy Association, and to all those who formed the various units of that great parade. The Board of Selectmen, Greg Doyon, Harold Litchfield, Steve Wigmore, Peter Laugelle, Joe Jaugelle, Dr. Godzik, Chief Kealey, Chief Brock and the Firefighters and the Nurses who staffed the First Aid Station all offered their assistance to our project without hesitation and were very helpful.

Particular thanks to Irving Gadow, our Harbormaster, who participated in every way possible with boundless enthusiasm.

I hope that I haven't missed anyone.

While we are passing out kudos, let's not forget The South Shore Art Center. The Art Center is an extremely valuable asset to our community and sometimes we fail to recognize that fact. Lanci Valentine was eager to include Harborfest in their Art Festival weekend and as it turned out it was a match made in Heaven. The contributions that the Art Center made to Harborfest were a great factor in the success of this event.

Are we going to do it again? You bet your bippy! And the Second Annual Traditional Harborfest will be better than the First. We will be holding a meeting to discuss the First and the Second on Wednesday, Sept. 18, 1991 at the Art Center. Come and tell us what you think.

A capsule summary of Harborfest? On Sunday afternoon during the cleanup, Ira Stoughton said to me "I've seen people on the Common today whom I haven't seen in five years or more." Nuff said.

discussion Monday night at the regular school committee meeting with a comment that he would like to see a rotational basis for the department chairmen.

He said he was concerned that the same people were being reappointed year after year without criteria for evaluation.

School Supt. Stephen Hart said there are evaluations of the chairmen, the criteria is spelled out in the contract. He also pointed out that the contract requires an application process.

"Usually we have only one applicant," Hart said.

Reidy suggested adding a new requirement — one that would limit the number of years someone could serve as chairman.

Reidy said he wanted High School Principal Meg Gallagher to come up with a system designed to rotate the chairmen.

"I think this is bigger than Meg," Kidder said.

The consensus of the committee was that the request has been made in prior years with no action.

"She's aware of our concern," Committee Chairman Barbara Bliss said, referring to the principal.

Reidy suggested the entire system could be reorganized so that there were fewer chairmen. He said he wants the reorganizational plan before the committee begins to look at the school budget for 1992.

Department chairmen are paid a stipend that reflects a percentage of their regular pay. Last year the stipends amounted to $27,000 for the group, according to Hart.

The job of department chairman requires evaluation of staff plus curriculum work and other administrative tasks.

CCC open rehearsal Aug. 8

Barbershop music is coming to Cohasset Thursday evening, Aug. 8 when the South Shore Men of Harmony, Division IVs championship Barbership chorus, will hold an open rehearsal at the Cohasset Community Center, 3 North Main St. at 8 p.m.

This rehearsal is open to any male singers, young or old, who enjoy close harmony singing. It isn't necessary to have a trained voice or even to be able to read music as our unique way of learning to sing together is as follows: the four parts (tenor, lead, baritone and bass) are taught separately and with the aid of recorded tapes.

The Men of Harmony is composed of male singers living in 28 different towns from Boston to Martha's Vineyard and Cape Cod. They rehearse every Thursday at the Hingham Community Center, 77 South Street, Hingham at 7:30 p.m. Men are always welcome to sit in and "bend a few chords" and have a most pleasant evening.

Smokey Robinson to entertain at benefit

Motown legend Smokey Robinson, known for such hits as "Tears of a Clown" and "Just to See Her," is in concert Saturday, July 27, at Cohasset's South Shore Music Circus. The concert and a reception afterward with Robinson will benefit South Shore Hospital's $3.2 million capital fund campaign.

The concert begins at 8 p.m. Tickets are $45 and include an $18 tax-deductible donation. For more information, call Barbara Wollan at the South Shore Health and Educational Foundation, 340-8334.

Robinson, former leader of "The Miracles," won a Grammy in 1987 for best male rhythm and blues vocal performance for "Just To See Her." He was born in Detroit in 1940 and led the Miracles until 1972, when he left to pursue a solo career. In 1973 he became executive vice president of Motown Records, and is still active as a record producer, group leader, vocalist and songwriter.

The concert will raise funds for South Shore Hospital's new $15.9 million, three-story emergency and maternity center. The new emergency center, which opened May 1, occupies the first story. The maternity center, which occupies the second and third stories, will open in mid-August.

First annual art competition

Sam Maggio, President of Arcor, Inc. calls his company's first annual art competition "a very positive experiment." More than 40 artists participated and several received awards at a recent ceremony at the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset.

The Weymouth company initiated the competition to see how artists could experiment with the space age epoxies and polymer coatings Arcor manufactures for industrial use. "The imagination of these artists has really brought a new look to our epoxies," says Maggio who is already looking forward to next year's competition.

Taking first place honors with her free-standing piece, "Green Goddess" was Pam Golden of Marshfield. Norwell's Ben Fuller was awarded second place for "Pain, Pleasure, Sickness and Death" and Duxbury's Kayt Randall placed third with "Bufodebilis (Green Toad)".

Honorable mention was given to Jack Nash of Cohasset.

The works are on display at the South Shore Art Center, 119 Ripley Road in Cohasset. Some pieces will be traveling with Arcor to various national trade shows during the year. For information on next year's competition, call 383-9548.

Little League's Dodgers challenge Sox 'til the end

By Joan Kovach

Back before the heat wave, even before all the thrills of Cohasset's July 4th celebration, our local Little League team was hard at work in playoff action. By June 25th only the A's, Sox, Mets and Dodgers remained in the picture. On that night, the A's gave the Dodgers everything they had, and they kept the lead see-sawing back and forth. Hitting for the Dodgers were Greg Bilton, Matt Lewis, Burke Davis, Justin Buckley, Jon Paul Lacks, Bobby Stansill and Tucker Gledhill. The A's Sean Norris, Matt O'Connor and Ben Ketchum hit as well. Norris, O'Connor and Ian Simons played well in the field. Lacks and Belson catching for the Dodgers aided the efforts of Dodgers' pitcher Justin Buckley who went the distance. Base running efforts by Jeremy Williams and Dennis Rooney contributed to the A's defeat and tournament elimination and the two run victory for the Dodgers, who then stood with 3 wins and no losses in the playoffs.

On Thursday, playoff action continued with the 3-1 Sox meeting the 3-0 Dodgers, for the first loss for the Dodgers in this series. Justin Golden was the winning pitcher for the Sox. Lewis, Bilton and Buckley had some nice hits for the Dodgers and Matt Belson did a superb job behind the dish, but in the end both teams stood at 3 and 1. The Red Sox received a bye and advanced to the championship game scheduled for June 30, while the Dodgers faced the Mets on Friday the 28th.

The Mets Frank Abadie had the only hit off Dodger pitcher Matt Lewis in this semi-final game. Lewis, Buckley, Bilton, Belson, and Davis had hits for the Dodges. Jon Paul Lacks two run homer over the centerfield fence, and Bobby Stansill's two run single contributed significantly to the Dodger's fourth playoff victory. Sam Goedecke and Ramana Lagemann made spectacular catches for the Mets. Dodgers catcher Bilton, outfielders Stansill, Gledhill, and Jim O'Sullivan and infielders Belson, (who also dazzled fans with his baserunning), Lacks, Davis and Buckley played very well to carry their team to the championship game.

Then came Sunday, and heavy rains had done a number on Barnes Field. A crew of Jim Magner and family, Kevin O'Connor, Buddy Bilton and Jay Caron did an outstanding job of returning the field to good condition for the championship game. By game time the sun was shining and the largest crowd of the year had filled the bleachers and lined the fences. Little League President John Smoot introduced the players and coaches of both teams. The national anthem was played and the starting pitch was hurled. The eager Dodgers jumped out to a 3-0 lead on a hit by Matt Lewis and some walks. It was the last lead for the Dodgers as Joey Magner settled down and shut-out his opponents for the next 5 innings. Justin Buckley pitched for the Dodgers. Bilton, Lacks and Lewis got the hits. But Magner's strong arm, supported by excellent fielding, especially Pat Hurley, Matt Verrochi and Justin Golden's solid defensive playing, and timely hitting, won the day. And so closed the 1991 Little League season, with the Sox on top and terrific efforts by all.

Flying Scots sail into fine results for this week . . .

The fleet had two challenging races over a five leg course which required agility with the spinnaker on three of the five legs. Winds were out of the southeast at a range of five to 15 miles per hour.

Wey, Kasperowicz, Swanborg and Bartow/Brister boats dueled it out at the front of the fleet with Kasperowicz leading at the final rounding mark. Kasperowicz gave the lead up to Wey after violating a cardinal rule: "When you have the lead, stay between your challenger and the finish line."

Wey could not join the second race due to spinnaker halyard problems. Swanborg finished third ahead of Bartow/Brister.

The second race belonged to Kasperowicz, followed by Jack McCarthy and Larry Mitchell in Roger Porter's boat. Bartow/Brister grabbed third.

Season standings had two changes. Swanborg took over eighth place from the Hislop/Lyons team by collecting 9 points versus the latter's 15 points for the day. Duggan moved into sixth place with nine points versus Jackson's 12.

Wey, Kasperowicz and Bartow/Brister led the pack after the Scot's 14th race.

And now, a new addition to the weekly Scot results: The View From the Back. "We always fight for last place," says Dan Walsh, who is in 12th overall. "We usually fight Ann and Paul Musto and Paul Cotter for it, and we were disappointed when the Mustos beat us in the first race."

Walsh and crew Brian Sullivan fought hard in the second race and came in last place in their boat Air Guitar. Musto could not be reached for comment on Walsh's comeback.

Leo's Hockey Tigers lose 6 to 2 to Blue Hills Tech

Submitted by John Kinchla

Cohasset players, Matt Kramers and Mike Riley scored the only goals for Leo's Tigers against a well disciplined and talented team from High School Division 3, Blue Hills Technical.

This game was decisive because the Tech team and the Tigers were tied for third place with identical records of 2 wins and 2 losses. Unfortunately, Cohasset's inability to play a tighter checking game was one of several factors contributing to the loss.

Tech dominated the Tigers. They had an obvious size advantage. They were a better passing team and they were faster. Cohasset's wings were losing the Tech forwards at the red line as a result Cohasset's defense was overmatched. Tech had numerous 3 on 2 breaks from the Cohasset blue line against the Tiger's exhausted defense.

In fairness to the Tigers, three key older, faster, stronger, more experienced players were missing from the lineup. The younger Tigers surely missed these front line players though they skated valiantly into the fray against Tech.

Cohasset's Mike Reynolds failed to score in this contest, though he skated magically in, around and through Blue Hills. Reynolds double shifted on offense and defense, his play prevented the game from becoming a Blue Hills rout.

Several other Cohasset players were able to stay up with the more physically aggressive Tech team. Eighth grader, Chris McKenna drew several tough shifts against Tech's first line and held his own. John Kinchla played an outstanding game on defense. At one point, he made an excellent pass to Mike Reynolds while he had three tech players pinned to the boards. Left Wing, ninth grader Brendan Kinchla keeps improving. His passing and heads-up play along the boards in this game was impressive. The Tigers miss their spark plug playmaking eight grade center Pat Reynolds. Pat was hurt in the game against Hull, but he has been participating in the team's dry land practices at Milliken Field.

Hopefully, we will see more Tigers at these practices in the future.

"I can't believe you're staying home alone, again, tonight!"™

If your mother's been saying that over and over it's probably not because she, necessarily, wants to see you married and settled, but because she wants you to have the fun and social life she thinks you deserve. (The kind you want, too!)

And, it's doubtful she knows how hard it is to meet new friends and "get a life." Or how awkward, intimidating and potentially embarrassing the singles scene and "planned" dating can be.

Well there's a way to make you and your mother happy.

It's called "MINGLES". As the name implies, it gives you the chance to do just that....mingle. To meet people in a relaxed atmosphere and enjoy a friendly dinner and comfortable conversation, like you would at a family party or wedding reception.

No testing. No fencing. No fear-of-failure.

Your "MINGLES" hostess, Muriel, will introduce you to other carefully selected men and women you can talk to and get to know without any pressure to date and mate. Because that's not what "MINGLES" is all about.

"MINGLES" lets you expand your circle of friends and find people with common interests to share and enjoy. If you happen to find someone special you'd like to spend more time with, "MINGLES" will make the next steps easy to take without putting you in a "rejection mode".

Call today and reserve your place at the next "MINGLES" dinner party. And tell your mother, Muriel said, "I'll take good care of you."

New advisory board subcommittee must be fully independent

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

The advisory committee cannot legally appoint a new committee to study the police and fire departments, but an independent citizens group could take on the task.

According to Town Counsel Richard Henderson, advisory committee chairman Arne Gjesteby's plan to appoint a committee to study the efficiency and cost effectiveness of the town's public safety departments is not within the committee's scope.

He said a citizen's group, free of municipal ties, would be free to investigate the departments and report at town meeting.

"There is nothing that prevents any group of citizens from organizing an informal committee to conduct a study of any town function of government entity if they wish to," Henderson said. "Such a committee would not have the usual privileges of a government committee such as the use of public facilities."

At Monday night's selectmen's meeting Henderson and Selectman Jane Goedecke said the committee to survey structure and functions of town government (government structure committee) could focus on the two departments. The consolidation of police and fire protection under one chief is one of the issues the committee could investigate.

Gjesteby, a long-standing critic of the fire department, was present at the meeting and engaged the board in a heated debate.

He said selectmen cannot take charge of a departmental study because of there role in ongoing contract negotiations.

"They (the union) may cry unfair labor practice," Gjesteby said, but added, "I cannot understand why you would try to hinder such a group."

"If you really feel you do not want to look at the fire department, then I am very disappointed."

Selectman Rocco Laugelle called Gjesteby "a hater of the fire department since day-one" and questioned his motives.

"Don't say I hate any department," Gjesteby shot back. "I resent that."

Laugelle said the advisory committee had no business forming a committee and dismissed the effort as "directly aimed at the fire department."

He defended the department's minimum staffing requirement.

It's 1-4-3 Minot on Government Island

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

Some people are fascinated by history. Some people are fascinated by the lure of old lighthouses.

Herb Jason is a man who is interested in both. He and others — like Noel Ripley and Joseph Lebherz — have spent hour after hour bringing both interests to light on the small stretch of rocky land known as Government Island.

Saturday the effort began to come together as the replica of the Minot's Light beacon moved one step closer to reality.

"Money is the thing holding it up," explained Ripley who has hopes of completing this particular project sometime next summer.

The base of the beacon has been in place for a year now. Last week a crew of volunteers from New England Steel Tank of Quincy joined with Jason brothers, Herb and Ken, to install the steel frames for the next level of the structure. Despite the mild rain Saturday, the volunteers — this time with the free services of Shaughnessey Crane and Denka Trucking — installed the bronze dome. The dome was crafted over the past winter at New England Steel Tank.

Soon the dome will be topped off with a chimney ball. It will stand about the height of a flagpole when complete. Of course, that is far smaller than the lighthouse itself. That stands 114 feet. Only the top portion is being replicated.

In "A Narrative History of Cohasset" Volume II, Burtram J. Pratt explains a bit of the background of the place:

"For many years, since 1917 in fact, when the Sandy Beach Association was formed to hold the beach area for public use, it was thought that there would be no further water front areas available for the public. In 1946, however, the Government Island tract, bordering the harbor, was offered for sale as surplus property. At a special town meeting the town exercised its option to purchase the property for recreational or utilitarian purposes, for the benefit of its citizens. The historic spot, where the granite blocks which went into the building of Minot's Light, were shaped and fitted before being transported to the light became town property."

Lebherz is a national expert on lighthouse restoration. The Scituate resident has been working with the Cohasset Historical Commission on the project out of love.

Everyone knows that's what Minot's Light symbolizes. Back in the days when it beamed, the light flashed 1-4-3, Morse code for "I love you."

The feeling about the project runs high for the volunteers.

The Jason brothers have just about completed work on the ball.

The second level will soon be closed in

Theater-in-the-round promotes nostalgia

By Alison Cohen
Mariner correspondent

A big green tent marks the passage of the seasons in Cohasset. When it rises on Sohier Street, it means summer is back again.

During its reign, the tent houses the sweet sounds of summer theater. Actors, musicians and comedians mount the circular stage to create magic while summer breezes and errant insects toy with the audience.

Welcome to the South Shore Music Circus.

The Music Circus hasn't always been there. Forty-two years ago, it was only a dream and a horse show arena. Actress Gertrude Lawrence first brought the concept to Massachusetts in 1950 after seeing tent-based theater in action in Lambertville, N.J. She fell in love with the idea of putting summer stock theater under tents. After all, barn theaters could be unbearably hot, but open-air performances were chancy.

Lawrence and her husband established the first Music Circus, later renamed The Cape Cod Melody Tent, on the Cape where they summered. At the same time, the pair convinced an active local theater group in Cohasset that performing under a tent was just the ticket.

The tent went up on Sohier Street in 1951. Along with the pond on the common and the spectacular sweep of ocean along Jerusalem Road, the Music Circus defines Cohasset for tourists and South Shore residents alike.

For the first few years, both the Hyannis and Cohasset tents were under the same management. Later they operated under separate management, but the bills of fare remained similar. As part of a nationwide group of summer theaters-in-the-round, they played host to touring actors with musical plays, comedies and light operettas. Resident actors, dancers and musicians worked with the guest stars.

The scrap book kept by the Music Circus management reveal a faded newspaper photograph of a dreamy ballerina with brunette hair. It announced the employment of a local girl as an apprentice member of the dance troupe at the Hyannis tent. Lee Remick, the dancer with stars in her eyes, later graduated from the tent's corps de ballet to tinseltown.

Liza Minelli is another star performer who got her start as an apprentice under the tents. Ed Kasses who runs the Circus, hopes to lure her back to the site of her early successes next summer.

Today, Cohasset, Hyannis and San Francisco remain the only tent-based summer theaters in the nation. Some of the others folded, others built permanent theaters. Ecological disaster and the Sea n' Cheese expands

Selectmen Monday night approved Sea 'n' Cheese's request to expand into a vacant store at Cushing Plaza.

According to president Richard Peters, the store plans to take over 3,000 feet that previously belonged to Bildner's market.

He said the move would allow the store to expand its grocery section and add another checkout.

The store's beer and wine section will be moved into the new store, but will not expand, he said.

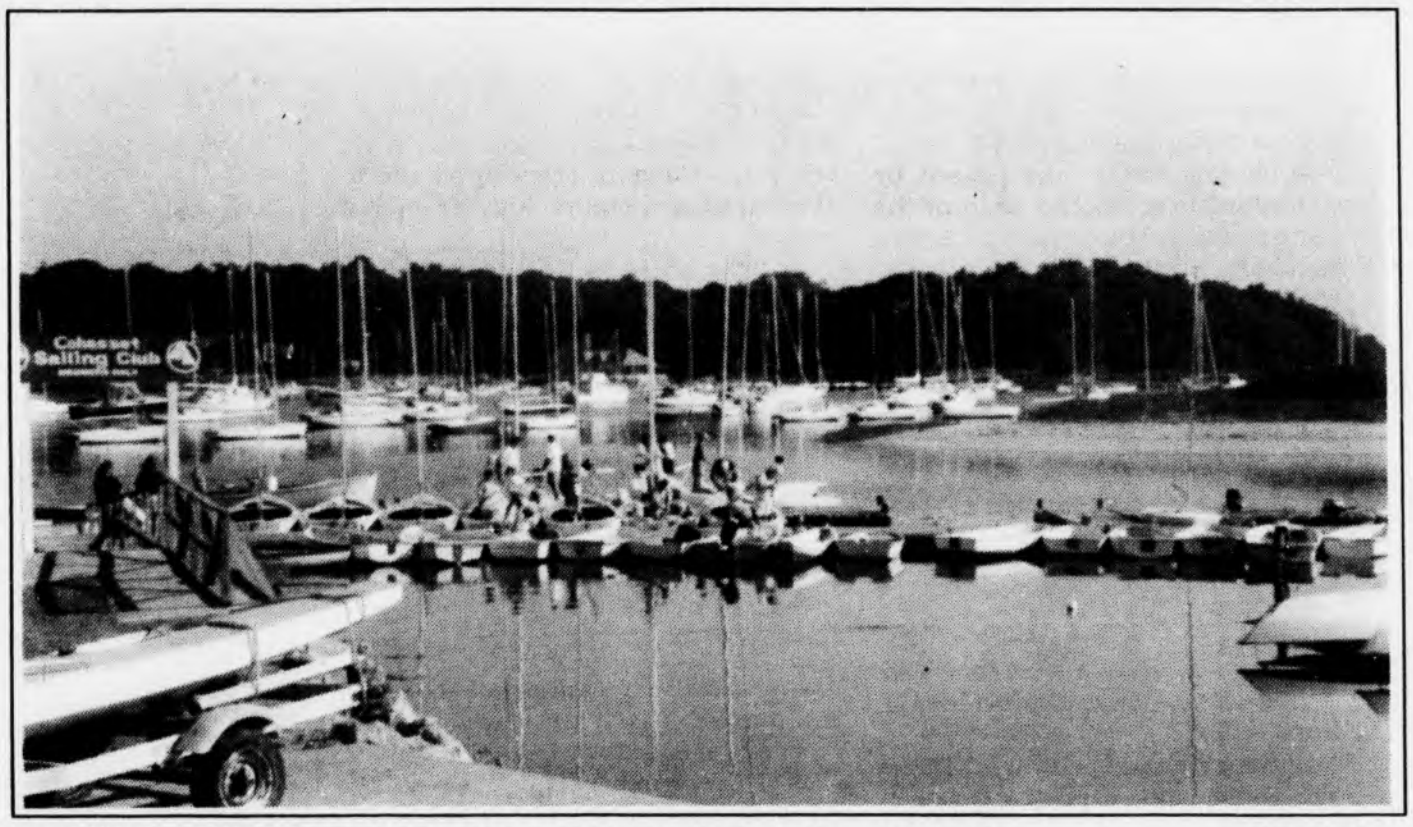
Selectmen unanimously approved the request.

Appointments available

Selectmen are looking for a few good men and women to fill vacancies on town boards.

At Monday night's meeting the board accepted resignations from five members of town committees.

Richard Senechal resigned from the housing partnership committee; Karin Bartow, Christine Conley and James Contis resigned from the arts lottery council; and John McNabb Jr., a key figure in the opposition to the expansion of Cohasset Heights Landfill, resigned from the groundwater protection committee.



Selectmen are urging anyone with an interest in serving to contact them.

The board also made several appointments and reappointments Monday night.

Reappointed were: Ed Lubitz to the board of appeals; Barbara Kern to the groundwater protection committee; Sine Pounder to the arts lottery council; and Keith Knowles, Ted Carroll, Elaine Davis, Robert Jackson, Sandra Kent, Michael McFadden, Susan Shumaker, Thomas Wigmore and Ralph Kidder to the drug and alcohol committee.

Ellie Waal and Kathleen Sullivan were new appointments to the drug and alcohol committee.

Because all the terms on the drug and alcohol committee expire at the same time, selectmen have asked the committee to devise a staggered appointment schedule to keep the committee "dynamic."

Fire chief by committee

Selectmen are progressing on choosing a new fire chief.

The board recently voted not to reappoint Fire Chief Daniel Brock to his position, citing his inability to work with the board to make budget cuts and implement cost savings.

At Monday night's meeting, the board voted to approve an advertisement for the position that will run in The Patriot Ledger, The Boston Sunday Globe, and The Beacon.

At the request of selectman Martha Gjesteby the ad will state a preference for a candidate with a bachelors degree in fire science.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle said the degree itself wasn't as important to him as experience because "it has only been recently that fire chiefs" have earned such a degree.

The board also discussed the possibility of appointing a citizen's committee to aid in the selection process. A suggestion that a fire chief from another town sit on the committee was rejected.

Laugelle said he thought the board could make the decision without any help.

"There are five selectmen here, if we cannot do the job we should quit," he said.

Bates Building sale moves along

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

Selectmen Monday night narrowly voted to honor town meeting's mandate to sell the Bates building for $1.

Non-binding resolutions passed by town meeting in April. And in June the meeting reaffirmed that vote, instructing the board to sell the building to Habitat for Humanity, an organization that provides low-income housing, for a token fee.

Despite town meeting's wishes, two members of the board maintained that selling the building for such a low price would be a mistake.

Recently the board deadlocked with a 2-2 vote over whether to restrict the property for low-income housing; Monday night the board voted to sell the property, 3-2. Selectman Jane Goedecke, who was absent from the first vote, asked for a reconsideration and provided the tie-breaker.

Chairman Ned Tebbetts, and Diana Kornet voted along with Goedecke in favor of the sale. Selectmen Rocco Laugelle and Martha Gjesteby voted against the proposal.

Laugelle said it would be unwise to "give the building away."

"We have to consider the departments in town before we give away a building worth $125,000 to $150,000," he said. "I think you are just 100 percent wrong. I don't see how you people can vote for this and give it away and not think about the services of the town."

Gjesteby suggested that instead of "selling the Bates Building for $1" the town look for "land to give to Habitat"

"It would be much better to start from scratch," she said. "It is very hard to give away something when we are in the cold economics of the times."

Tebbetts said he would abide by town meeting's wishes, even if they were non-binding because he believed in "democracy."

"Town meeting gave substantial support to the Habitat proposal and we have had strong letters of support from many people," he said.

Town counsel Richard Henderson said he was unsure if the vote to restrict the sale to low-income housing, would be in line with state's new Uniform Procurement Act. He told the board that they should be able to reject any other proposals, if they can give a good reason. He said earmarking the property for affordable housing should qualify as such a reason.

Tag-a-keg starts

Within the next few weeks the tags for Cohasset's new "tag-a-keg" program should be ready for distribution.

According to Keith Knowles, the chairman of the drug and alcohol committee, the tags have been ordered and as soon as they are delivered they will be put into use.

Under the new system, a band bearing the name address and date of birth of the purchaser will be placed around every keg sold in town.

A $50 returnable deposit is required for each band. If the owner is caught serving a minor, the deposit is forfeited and $40 of the cost goes to the Cohasset Students Against Drunk Driving program.

New book shops opens

Local (and sometimes not-so-local) authors will be part of the regular bill of fare at the new book store that opened officially Saturday in Cohasset Village.

Bob Hale, a novelist and nonfiction author from Duxbury, and Marcia Sewell, author of children's books were both part of the program for the grand opening of the Little Harbor Book Shop on Main Street.

Balloons and homemade cookies were available for those who came to celebrate with Joan Call, owner of the shop.

The shop plans to offer a range of choices including children's books, new fiction, cookbooks, a section on health and parenting, university press selections and the usual line of nonfiction.

Books distributed by small distributors will be the specialty of the shop.

Marcia Sewell explains her illustrations to a group of children at the grand opening The Little Harbor Bookshop in Cohasset Village.

Call said she is able to offer a wide selection, despite the limited space in the store, by using a computer system. Only one or two of any book will be out on the shelves.

"I can keep the books by ordering daily," she explained.

An author has already been lined up for an appearance next month.

Town counsel okays powerless subcommittee

(The following letter is the final word on the Advisory Committee's new subcommittee.)

Mr. Gregory J. Doyon,
Executive Secretary—
Board of Selectmen
Town Hall
Dear Greg:

In response to your memorandum of July 23, 1991, I have examined the question of whether or not the Advisory Committee had the authority to create a subcommittee to study the Fire Department.

The scope of the Advisory Committee's authority is found from examination of Massachusetts General Laws Chapter 39, Section 16; Massachusetts General Laws Chapter 40, Section 6; and the Town of Cohasset General By-Laws, Article V. Based upon a review of those statutes and by-law, it is my opinion that the Advisory Committee does not have the legal authority to create a Fire Department Study Committee or any other subcommittee that is not composed entirely of its members.

Massachusetts General Laws Chapter 39, Section 16 provides in part that certain committees must provide by by-law for the..."election or appointment and duties of appropriation, advisory or finance committees, who shall consider any and all municipal questions for the purpose of making reports or recommendations to the Town;..." The statute is mandatory in that the committee must be appointed, and leaves to the discretion of the local community the duties to be assigned to the Advisory Committee which may be authorized to "consider any and all municipal questions." The extent of the Advisory Committee's authority locally is determined by Article V of the Town By-Laws as adopted by the Town Meeting.

Article V of the Town By-Laws contains 10 subsections, most of which deal with procedural matters involving the Advisory Committee. The substance of the Board's authority is found in subparagraph (h) and (i). Subparagraph (h) provides that the Advisory Committee shall review all articles in the Warrant for any Town Meeting and shall report thereon to the Town. Subparagraph (i) deals with the review of budgets and recommendations thereon. Paragraph (j) of Article V allows the Advisory Committee to conduct hearings but it would appear from a reading of the entire section and the preceding sections that the hearings would relate to Town Meeting Warrant articles.

Nothing contained in Article V permits the Advisory Committee to form subcommittees to study municipal questions in general, and particularly, there is no authority to create committees to study municipal questions consisting of individuals who are not members of the Advisory Committee. Under the circumstances, such committee could not be considered a "Town" study committee and, therefore, would have no standing to present a report as a government authorized committee to the Town Meeting.

Notwithstanding, there is nothing that prevents any group of citizens from organizing an informal committee to conduct a study of any Town function or government entity if they wish to do so. Any member of the committee who is a registered voter of the Town could then request to be heard on Town Meeting floor, make his or her recommendations, and indicate that they are speaking on behalf of a committee or organization.

Such committee, however, would not have the usual privileges of a government committee, such as use of public facilities, a budget, and the right to conduct formal hearings. Therefore, the scope of its inquiry would seem to be limited to the contents of public records and information voluntarily given by private citizens.

If I can be of any further assistance, please don't hesitate to let me know.

Very truly yours,
Richard A. Henderson

them," he said. "I've needed them a few times and they have been there. I don't see how we could have protection for the town with any less than we have."

Selectman Diana Kornet said she "was concerned about the position" the proposed committee would put the board in.

She said she feared a committee be biased and "already have its mind made up."

"If (the committee) appeared to be slanted...it could be held against us as a town," she said.

Selectmen Jane Goedecke said she was concerned about the advisory committee "going off in a new tack."

"This is not the role of the advisory committee," she said. "Under this form of government this is not the way things happen."

Chairman Ned Tebbetts agreed. "I think it is very important we follow legal formalities," he said.

He said Gjesteby's charge that selectmen have not tried to control the department's costs is "unfair."

"We have had repeated confrontations with the fire chief about his not taking adequate actions to control fire department costs."

Tebbetts said these confrontations were one of the reasons they voted not to reappoint Chief Daniel Brock.

Gjesteby said Tebbetts explanation for firing Brock "doesn't hold" because there is nothing the chief can do to control costs as long as the department's contract forces a minimum staffing.

"This town has not done what it can to control expenses on the fire department," he said. "I see no movement."

YPST scheduled performances

The curtain will rise this weekend on the Young People's Summer Theatre 15th anniversary productions with youths from all over the South Shore between the ages of 12 and 22.

YPST, debuting in 1977, will present the Eugene Ionesco "anti-play" "The Bald Soprano" Saturday, Aug. 3 at 8 p.m. and Sunday, Aug. 4 at 5 p.m. at the First Trinitarian Congregational Church on Country Way in Scituate. Then, in the annual tradition of producing a big, brassy Broadway musical, the group will present the 1966 Tony-Award winning "The Apple Tree" on August 8, 9, and 10 at 8 p.m. in Scituate High School.

"The Apple Tree" was written by Jerry Bock and Sheldon Harnick, best known for "Fiddler on the Roof," and originally starred Barbara Harris (who won a Tony for her performance) and Alan Alda, an unknown in those "pre-MASH" days. The show consists of three mini-musicals: "The Lady or the Tiger?," "The Diary of Adam and Eve," and "Passionella."

Donald Capen, Program Director, says the show follows in the footsteps of all the previous YPST productions: "The Apple Tree" is very funny, with lots of great but unknown Broadway songs," he said. "Unfortunately, the title of the show isn't very appealing so it may mislead people. I can assure everyone they'll be very entertained if they've never seen this show before, which includes a full orchestra—the whole works.

Tickets for "The Bald Soprano" are $3.. The play is a one-act and will run approximately one hour. "The Apple Tree" tickets are $7 in advance (all times for Senior Citizens) and $9 at the door. Tickets can be reserved by calling 837-4027 or can be purchased at the door.

State aid figures finalized

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

Cohasset's financial picture is slowly coming into focus and it may not be pretty.

The town will receive less state aid and will be required to pay higher assessments for the fiscal year that began July 1, according to the recently received "Cherry Sheets."

The state aid figures are called cherry sheets because the numbers were once printed on cherry colored paper.

Town accountant Mary Gallagher said that using these figures the town will have an estimated shortfall of $152,676. She hopes to have a revised and up-to-date figure for the shortfall in time for the selectmen's meeting Aug. 12.

Selectmen have individually stated that they have no interest in participating in a "Super Tuesday" override to make-up Cohasset's state aid cut. The one-time override has gained the support of Gov. William Weld.

The town's total state aid will decrease by $297,470.

Although Chapter 70 school aid will remain the same from last year, "additional assistance" will decrease from $506,483 to $209,013.

Funding for the school lunch program will decrease $943.

Funding for school improvement ($1,991 last year) has been eliminated.

On the plus side, reimbursement for school transportation programs increased from $45,567 to $53,191.

Veteran's benefits will be more than cut in half, dropping from $3,570 to $1,465.

Cohasset's county assessment will increase $9,962 in the new fiscal year. The new assessment is $62,297.

The assessments for required teachers health insurance, mosquito control, Metropolitan Area Planning Council, and the Massachusetts Bay Transit Authority all increased in the new package.

In total, the town will have to pay assessments of $388,492.

"Its just another year of decreased state aid," Hart said of the state figures. "It could have been worse."

Hart said the impact of the decrease is difficult to figure because no money for contractual raises for the town's three major unions was budgeted.

The police, fire and teachers unions are all currently in contract negotiations.

Hart said if these unions had a contract, the amount of money budgeted for raises would force "severe cuts."

He said because these contracts are unresolved there is the "misleading appearance" that required cuts were not "that bad." He said once these contracts are settled, additional raises will significantly add to the shortfall and could force the town to "cut even deeper."

Hart said the legislature's plan allowing school systems to defer one-twelfth of teacher salaries into next year has been "confusing" to sort out.

He said the school department could defer up to $270,000, which could only be used to decrease the school shortfall. The money could not be spent for another purpose, he said.

Hart said complete guidelines for the plan should be available over the next few weeks. Because no guidelines have been released, information about the plan has been unclear and often contradictory, he said.

Hart said it was originally thought the deferment was a one-time allowance; new information suggests that it would be a permanent addition.

He said he would only recommend the plan if the addition was permanent, because otherwise "you are just going to add it on to the following year."

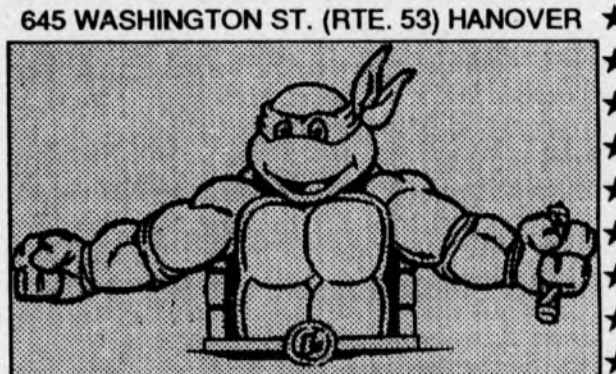
Hart said there were also concerns about how the plan would be affected by collective bargaining.

"Personally I would like to see all other options explored before that was used," he said.

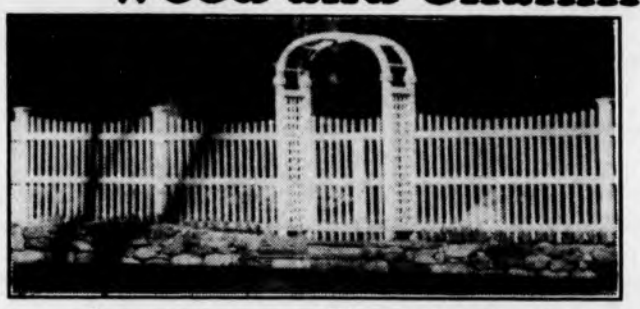
'Housesitter' schedule detailed

Hollywood's cameras will be rolling into Cohasset a little earlier than expected.

According to Michael Williams, the location manager for "Housesitter" a romantic comedy starring Steve Martin and Goldie Hawn, the planned shooting schedule in Cohasset has been moved earlier in August than original plans.



He said the film will shoot for four days in mid-August.



The planned shooting schedule includes:

• On Friday, August 16 the film company will shoot on the town green and at the end of Main Street.

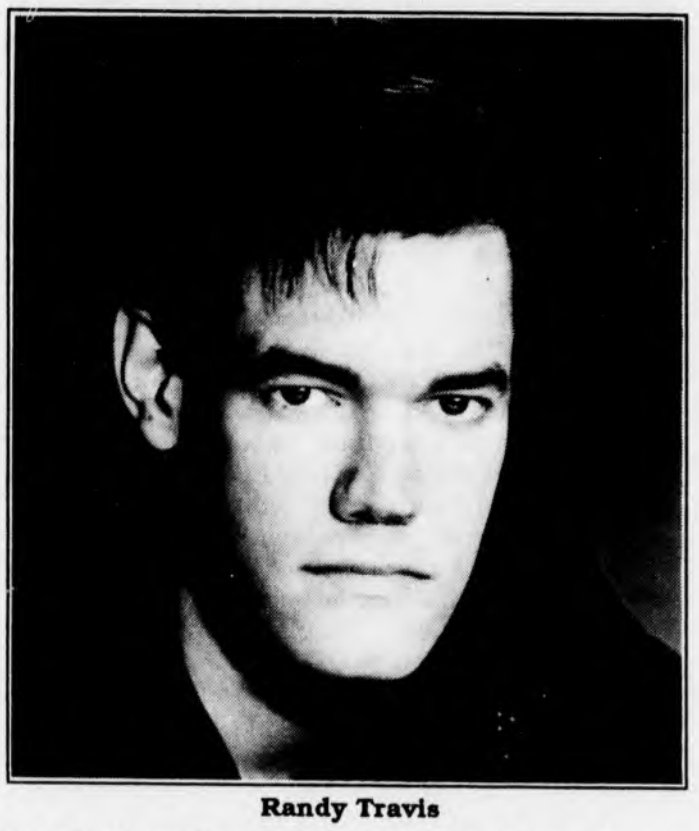
Randy Travis redefines country at the Music Circus

Perhaps the most sought-after young country singer in the world today, Randy Travis, became the youngest ever to join the Grand Ole Opry — by invitation only — in 1989. When asked to join, says his agent Lib Hatcher, "They didn't just say, 'we want you, Randy.' They said, 'We need you, Randy.'"

With his dark blue eyes, brown hair swept off a high forehead and a prominent square jaw, Travis performed at the South Shore Music Circus Friday, July 26. One of country music's "New Traditionalists," Travis has been credited with almost single-handedly redefining "country" for a nation which had become accustomed to viewing it as a musical outgrowth of pop during the crossover period before his industry inception five years ago.



His seven-piece band performed songs from his four platinum albums, and from last year's duet compilation, including its title cut, "Heroes and Friends," and the George Jones collaboration, "A Few Old Country Boys." One of his twelve number one hits performed was "Too Gone For Too Long," based on the realization that some things never can be, and probably never could have been.

With its warm richness and distinct country twang, Travis's voice has been described by Minnie Pearl as "a voice that comes around once in a generation." It sounds familiar and at the same time completely distinctive. And it seems odd at times watching such a clean-cut young man on stage bellowing out such a mature timbre.

"I try to sing with as much feeling as I can, like it really happened," he says. He sang from the soul of the cheater with "Rock Bottom of Your Heart," while in contrast pulling off the show-breaker as the ever-faithful lover in the sentimental classic, "Forever and Ever, Amen," 1988's Country Music Song of the Year. The fiddle and steel guitar produced a pleasing background as the unmoved Travis sang through it all, celebrating love and fidelity in marriage, a departure from the country music stereotype Travis describes as "lyin' and cheatin' and tears in your beer." Convincing vocals on "I Told You So," combined with tight drumming and an effectively whining steel guitar had the audience reeling.

In the early eighties, Nashville record executives labeled Travis's music "hopelessly passé," and threw his demo tapes in the trash. A Warner Brothers vice-president indicated that "We needed to get hipper, and Randy wasn't hip." He really was a singing cook in 1985, performing as Randy Ray (born Traywick) at the Nashville Palace, a tourist nightclub near Opryland, frying catfish, washing dishes, then hanging up his apron to sing. On why it took him so long to get signed, he says, "I guess I just had to wait my turn. The business got real stale there because so many people were trying to cut crossover." With the new surname, "Travis," which was picked out by a Warner executive, his first number one single, "On the Other Hand," hit the charts in 1986. He performed the classic tempted-to-cheat song in a slower tempo than the studio version, with electric piano and violin evident.

"I haven't changed anything," he says. "Country music is about the things people go through in everyday life, whether it be fallin' in love or fallin' out of love or hard times at work or gettin' drunk or whatever."

Randy Travis

The twangy steel guitar circulated through Brooke Benton's "It's Just a Matter of Time." "Diggin' Up Bones" turned the audience into laid-back foot-stompers.

A gospel song, "Gonna Have a Little Talk With Jesus," which will appear on the next album to be released "sometime around September," brought on a spontaneous clap-along. Travis says he sings "straight-ahead country music" — traditional story material staying in touch with the country's natural constituency — the common laborer, simple folk, and family.

Though Travis admits he is "still not a great guitar player; I just mainly play rhythm," his gentle guitar solo, complete with subdued pastel lighting, produced a nice, calming mood. David Johnson's featured fiddle solo was a fully rousing highlight of the evening. "Honky Tonk Moon" charmed, and the banjo and fiddle laced through "I'm Not Sure That I'm Still Over You" made for some timeless reminiscing.

According to one of Travis' friends, he would gladly trade in his dozens of performance awards for one honoring his songwriting. When he can find the time off from touring, "I just pick up a guitar," he says, "and sing till I hear something I like and can say it simply." He loves to do things with a sense of humor, but his main standard is that his song tells a good story. .

After a show, he unwinds on his half-million dollar whirlpool-equipped custom bus — a far cry from the converted bread truck he used not so long ago — watching "Andy of Mayberry" videotapes and eating popcorn in bed by midnight. He owns horses and enjoys riding through his country property near Nashville. "Out in the country, now that feels like home," he says. "That is how I was raised, out away from everybody and that is what I still like."

The band played tight on "There's No Place Like Home," a very slow ballad. Travis showed respect for a couple of traditional standards which closed out the show: "Dixieland," and "Glory, Glory, Hallelujah." He didn't tinker much with them — just a blue note here, a hesitation there, and a slower than usual tempo. The silvery whine of the steel guitar playing with the violin brought the twinkle to Travis' eye as he shook hands with dozens of satisfied customers who came down to the stage during the medley.

With that, Travis has renewed his loyalty to the traditional country fans. "Do what you love, and be what you are," Travis says. "To me, that's country music. With me, what you see is what you get."

Appointments Friday

At Monday night's selectmen's meeting, Arne Gjesteby, the soon-to-retire chairman of the advisory committee, accused Town Counsel Richard Henderson of trying to kick him off the Troika.

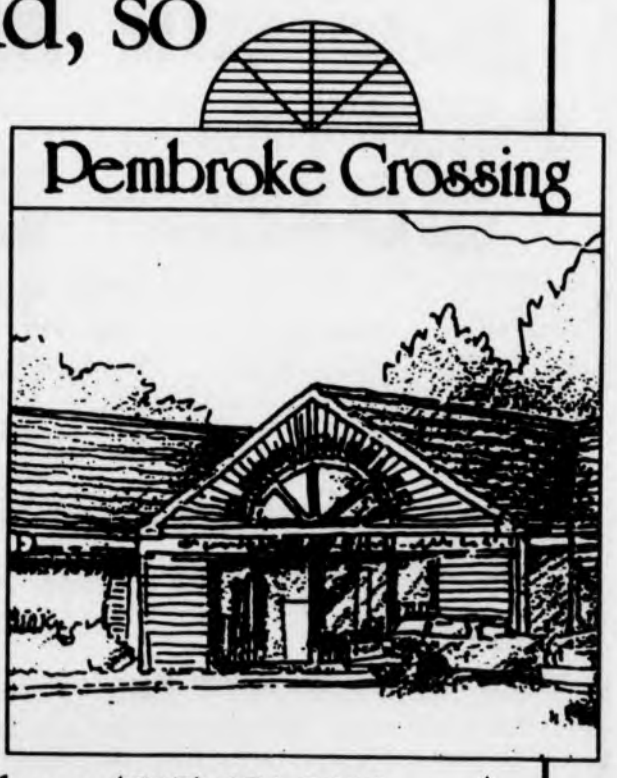
The Troika is the town's official appointing authority. It consists of the chairman of the board of selectmen (Ned Tebbetts), the town moderator (William Weeks) and the chairman of the advisory committee.

During an heated discussion about the possibility of a public safety department, uniting police and fire, and a subcommittee the advisory committee wanted to study the idea, Gjesteby said he was being crowded out of the Troika.

"Town counsel told me a week ago I could not be on the Troika," he said.

"I never said that," countered Henderson in a loud voice.

Gjesteby said executive secretary Greg Doyon told him that Henderson wanted him out.



Henderson denied he ever told Gjesteby to leave and said he was offended by the accusation.

"Did I ever say that to you sir," he asked.

As the two discussed the situation, Selectman Rocco Laugelle joined the fray.

Caleb Lothrop House celebrates 170th birthday

The Cohasset Historical Society will hold a weekend celebration this August in honor of the 170th anniversary of its 1821 headquarters house, the Caleb Lothrop House, 14 Summer Street. The brick-ended Federal home was constructed in the summer of 1821 by 22-year-old Caleb Lothrop. Its walls were raised on August 23 of that year.

From Friday, Aug. 23 to Sunday the 25 the Cohasset Society will present a series of events marking the anniversary of the house. On the 23rd, from 4:30 to 7 p.m. there will be a wine and cheese reception at the Lothrop House. A special feature will be an exhibit of Lothrop family-related paintings and photographs. Also on view will be Society-owned oil and watercolor paintings from among those recently restored with grant money from the Cohasset Arts Lottery Council. All are related to the history of the town.

On Saturday Aug. 24 the Society will present two tours, each by bus, to Cohasset historical sites. One will traverse the town's shoreline roads to view the "summer cottages" and 19th century estates for which Cohasset is known. The other will traverse the town's "ancient ways" to see old homes and early sites. Each tour will be accompanied with commentary by knowledgeable Society guides. Saturday evening will see an "old fashioned clambake" on the grounds of the Lothrop House, starting at 6 p.m. Completing the weekend's festivities at Caleb Lothrop House will be a Sunday morning pancake breakfast starting at 7:30 and running through the morning.

Tickets for the events may be purchased as a group or individually, prices will be announced. The Society's phone is 383-6930.

• We'll begin this week with a plea for any help that you might be able to give Lee Sullivan. She lost two rings at the tennis courts last week, one is a silver dolphin, the other a gold garnet ring. Please call Lee at 383-1295 if you can help her in any way, she'd be so grateful.

• Congratulations are in order for Amy J. Shephard, the daughter of Pauline and Paul L. Shephard of 8 Buttonwood Lane. Amy graduated recently from Dean Junior College, where she majored in Criminal Justice. Amy hopes to continue her studies at Suffolk University, and we sure do applaud you Amy.

• Had a nice talk recently with Meghan M. Kelley, the local coordinator for the American Institute for Foreign Study. Her 15 students arrived on July 26, one more than she knew about. So, there is a young man that is looking for a home. Among the families that have taken in these Japanese students are the Shultz family, the Bugleys, the Jordans, the Jenkins, the Johansens, the MacDonalds, the Bixbys, the Langmaids, the Wilshires, the Hawks and the Kierces.

So, Meghan is looking for one more host family, and she is even willing to split the stay with two or more families. They are busy most of the day, with studies and plans made to encourage the learning of our culture, so you need not worry about having to entertain him all of the time. Just imagine how you would feel if you went from the USA to Japan, then found that you were "an extra", and there was no house for you to stay at. Open your heart and your home and give Meghan a call at 773-5050.

• You may remember that I told all about the birth of Toby, Jennifer Chamberlain's baby boy last month and how happy all were over the event. I left out one very important factor, the maternal grandparents. Peter and Elizabeth Kerner are thrilled to pieces over their grandson's birth, and you can bet that they will take an active part in "spoiling" that precious bundle to pieces. It's such fun.

• Ted Carrol sent a note to fill us all in on the Recreation Department's week ahead, and it certainly sounds like a fun one. On Friday, from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the Osgood School, they will hold a Fun Carnival. The proceeds from that will benefit the Recreation Program. That night, Aug. 2, there will be a sleepover for the Recreation kids. It is the 2nd annual one, and they are hoping for a success like the one held last year. Finally, this week is Staff Appreciation week, organized by the parents to show support for the staff's work with over 290 children this summer. Hope everyone enjoys what sounds like a super week for all.

• Chip Anderson, who will be a senior at CHS, is out in San Diego, Calif. for the summer swimming with the Coronado Swim Association. His coach is John Larson the former coach of the University of Alabama. He must be doing something right because Chip qualified this past weekend for the Junior Olympics to be held in National City, Ca. in two weeks. He qualified in the 50 meter freestyle and the 50 meter backstroke. Good luck Chip!

• We want to congratulate Steven and Lois Cook of 9 Bates Lane on the birth of their son, born at South Shore Hospital on July 8. Enjoy that baby.

• More baby news ... Sara and William Sestito of 61 Smith Place gave birth to a baby girl on July 19 at South Shore Hospital. Congratulations to you all.

• Meg McCullough's step-sister, Andrea, threw a wonderful bridal shower for her last weekend, what fun. Meg and Rick are "tying the knot" in September and the gifts that they received will certainly look great in their new home they are in the process of fixing up. It was a grand day, the decorations were beautiful, and the food scrumptious. We take this opportunity to wish Meg and Rick a happy engagement and a long and wonderful life together.

• Cannot believe the dedication of you golfers. As we drove by Cohasset Country Club last Saturday (could barely see the course from the street it was raining so hard) there were several foursomes complete with golf umbrellas playing in the teeming rain.

• Heard a great review of the Chart House on the Pat Whitley Restaurant Show last weekend. The caller raved about the menu, the service, the food, and the friendly and complete service. Did you know there is fresh fish flown in daily from Hawaii? Be sure to give the Chart House a try, you'll be glad that you did.

• Sheila Edmonds was spotted around town last week, looking super and having a pleasant vacation here with her daughter Erin. They stayed with Sheila's Mom and Dad, Mary and Bruce Edmonds. The heat wave didn't bother them, they are from Texas where there is real heat.

• That's the news for this week, please let us know what plans you have during this summer vacation.

Debbie Ketchum on skin care

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

I've never been the type that sought out glamour.

I'm comfortable in my denim outfits. I hate to spend time on frivolous details.

There's something deep inside me — maybe it's the part that listened to the Catholic school nuns — that believed being pretty wasn't important. What was important was being smart, by my inner standard.

That's why I felt more than a little discomfort as I got ready to try the line of Mary Kay products. Not that I did a lot.

The way I got ready was by putting a fresh coat of lipstick on and running a comb through my hair.

You see, I've come to the realization that someone over 40 ought to begin to take care of her skin. A friend of mine told me Mary Kay was the way to go.

The idea of trying something before paying for it had an appeal. I don't know how many times I've bought lipstick I only wear to my mother's because the color looked fine on the package in the drugstore.

Anyway, Debbie Ketchum of Beechwood Street, a Mary Kay beauty consultant, was willing to spend some of her time explaining a fact or two about skin and skin care.

She began by explaining that skin care is more important than the glamour parts of the line.

"We'll just start you with the basics today," she said, opening pink tubes and squeezing white stuff onto the pink plastic tray she set in front of me.

"Now begin by putting on this headband to keep your hair off your face," she handed me the kind of headband I used to wear in high school. I thought they were glamorous back then.

Part of me wanted to resist messing up my hair. But two years ago I gave into the mousse crowd and now I have indestructible hair — hair that can be fluffed back into place with a hand and some water.

Debbie went on about Mary Kay — how the women who work for her have the potential of pulling in top dollar — how the company began with skin care.

Meanwhile I answered her simple questionaire and discovered my skin verges on dry.

When I was young, it was oily. This is another sign of aging. I could stick to my soap and water or water and water routine if only the dreaded dry epidermis would disappear.

She glopped out some gentle cleansing cream. I moved the cream in circular motion. And then I rinsed. She told me not to use hot or cold water — just lukewarm water.

My skin felt less tight after the cleansing.

I patted dry and we moved on to retexturizing — which is a gentle mask. We waited and my skin didn't turn into a cracking and hardened cement. When the mask dried, I was still comfortable.

My skin felt smoother after the mask.

She squirted some gentle action freshener in my waiting tray. I dapped it on my face and neck with cotton balls.

Then the final touch was the enriched moisturizer — 100 percent fragrance free and safe for sensitive skin, according to the packaging.

Debbie assured me the simple program would only take about five minutes a day. (The mask is only to be used twice a week.)

Then she was ready with foundation makeup, eye shadow, and more.

Her quiet explanations would have probably edged me toward buying something. But I bought the whole skin care system.

A name change

An idea floated Saturday on the incoming tide in the Cove — an idea whose time may well have come. The idea is a simple one, generated after some thought by Herb Jason.

The idea is to change the name of Government Island to Lighthouse Island.

Lighthouse Island has a nice ring to it. And it makes more sense to anyone under 60 than the old name. You see there was a time when Government Island was owned and used by the federal government. That time passed back in the 1940s.

Jason sees the small strip of property, which is town-owned, as a possible tourist attraction.

But no matter, the new name sounds a little zippier. Lighthouse Island. It might even help pick up the fundraising that's been going on to finish the replica of the top portion of Minot's Light.

You can see the dome on the turret this week.

Saturday some good people — volunteers all — topped the steel work with the glittering dome that Herb and Kenny Jason have been hammering into place in the safety of the space at New England Steel Tank in Quincy.

Mark Koopman, a North Scituate resident who is president of New England Steel Tank, deserves some credit for his interest in the project and his ongoing generosity.

The steel work for the middle stage of the replica was all made at New England Steel Tank, according to the actual engineer's specifications for the original lighthouse.

The original specifications call for bronze but in order to develop the replica within a possible budget the supports have been made with steel. They will be trimmed bronze and the middle portion will be finished with 36 windows, which will be dedicated in honor of various donors. It seems 20 of the windows have already been spoken for.

The portion of the lighthouse being built is the top section of the lighthouse. It will stand 37 feet high when completed. A small ball, that served as a chimney of sorts, will soon be added to the dome.

Besides New England Steel Tank, there are some other businesses in line for some credit. They are: Shaughnessey Crane and Denka Trucking. Without the free services of those two businesses the over-sized dome would still be sitting in Quincy.

It goes without saying that Noel Ripley, who needs no qualification, and Joseph Lebherz, a Scituate resident who loves lighthouses, have been doing fine work in bringing the project to this stage.

Three other volunteers helped drill, hammer and otherwise move the project along this past week. All three are workers at New England Steel Tank in Quincy who have been watching the progress. They are Kevin Stewart, Kevin Sullivan and Bob Burns.

Not long ago an anonymous donor bailed the project out. Money is again running low, according to the key people.

Anyone interested in helping in a small way can buy a Minot's Light T-shirt from Ripley, who lives on South Main Street.

Donations (tax-deductible) may be sent to: The Captain's Walk, Cohasset Historical Commission, 41 Highland Ave., Cohasset, MA 02025.

Re: "Housesitter"

Dear Michael,

The Cohasset Business Community through the efforts of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce threw all of its support behind the filming of your movie in Cohasset.

We felt that this project would provide a bit of a boost for the Community at large and perhaps some of the local businesses.

In the course of our discussions you indicated that there was potential for some local businesses to participate in some sign work, some awning work and to provide the trees to be planted in the Village area. As I stated on many occasions, we would expect that we would be included in any bidding process.

I would appreciate it if you will call me to update the status of the situation. I hope that the door is open to our local businesses which can certainly use a boost in this economy.

Sincerely,
R.E. Martin Jr.
President
Cohasset Chamber of Commerce

The Roys are thanked for the fourth

The following letter was submitted for publication.)

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Roy,

The Cohasset Recreation Commission, at their meeting of July 15, resolved to extend their gratitude to you for the July 4 fireworks display that you sponsored. The Commission's gratitude comes to you on behalf of the many residents who enjoyed the display, as well as from the town.

As you may be aware, many people were able to enjoy the fireworks, from such vantage points as Government Island, the Harbor and from craft in the area. Without any question, the display added much spirit to the celebration of Independence Day for many people of all ages.

During periods of economic strife, municipalities are often forced to reduce, or eliminate fireworks, as well as other holiday celebrations that numerous people of all ages, often look forward to. Sharing with the community this sort of opportunity, provided a great deal of enjoyment for a great number of individuals and families.

Cohasset as you know, is a very fine community and it is so because of the people who live here. We are indeed fortunate to have neighbors such as the Roys.

Very truly yours,
John M. Worley, Director

SSAC sends its thanks for help with art festival

To the Editor:

I want to thank you for all the great press you gave the South Shore Art Center to promote our annual Art Festival. The turnout this year was outstanding and I'm sure part of the credit belongs to your paper for the special attention you gave us.

Remembering my former days as a newspaper editor, I'm well aware of the abundance of press releases that flood your mail box each day. Accordingly, I'm most grateful for the consideration you show the Art Center all year long in printing our releases in the Hingham Mariner as well as the Cohasset paper.

Thank you again for helping make this year's Art Festival such a popular success.

Joan Wright
Public Relations Director

Art Festival/Harborfest finals

The tents have come down, the common has been cleared, and the final figures tallied to mark the end of the 36th annual South Shore Art Center Art Festival and 1st Cohasset Harborfest.

The Art Center has announced it netted $8,100 in earnings after expending $20,100 to host the three-day Festival. This is the biggest fund-raising opportunity for the non-profit organization which serves all of the South Shore.

The Harborfest Steering Committee reported that expenses of $3,190 reduced its net earnings to $910. That balance will provide seed money for next year's Harborfest, which the committee hopes will become a Cohasset tradition.

Over 400 volunteers donated their time and services to the Art Festival. Several local organizations contributed as well to Harborfest. Next year's Art Festival/Harborfest is scheduled for June 26 to 28, 1992. Committees will be forming this fall. For more information, call 383-9548.

bottom line helped kill the tent.

"It takes a lot of money to run a theater under tents," executive director Kasses said recently. "The life expectancy of the tent is not as good as in the old days because of acid rain."

Kasses estimates that he will have to replace the canvas tents at Hyannis and Cohasset every five years. At a cost of $55,000 per tent, it represents a substantial chunk of overhead to be offset by ticket sales. The Hyannis tent is new, the Cohasset tent has a few years left.

Kasses and company plan to resist the trend toward permanent structures.

"I do it for a reason," he says. "It fits the character of the surroundings and it fits the venue."

But the hardheaded businessman reveals the heart of the romantic as he reminisces about the sight of the tent going up every year, the sound of rain on the canvas and the feel of soft sea breezes drifting throughout the tent.

Listening to Kasses talk about the Music Circus and following along on a tour of the facility makes it easy to understand why he asked his predecessor to let him know if he ever decided to retire and why Kasses leapt to the challenge five years — or four seasons — ago when the job opened.

Kasses himself brings an important combination of skills and knowledge. He has operated a theater, been a promoter and an agent. He still keeps his hand in several aspects of the business. Kasses books performers into major theaters around the country such as the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, the Sanger in New Orleans and the Majestic in San Antonio. Additionally, he represents Cher, Olivia Newton-John and Nana Mouskouri.

Kasses says the work he does in booking other theaters and representing artists through his separate business, Princeton Entertainment, gives him greater clout in attracting performers to the Music Circus.

"A lot of artists don't like to play in the round," he says. His credibility as an agent helps convince them it's not as difficult as they think it will be. Currently he's working on Minelli, Barry Manilow and Dan Fogelberg whom he thinks are well-suited to the venue and likely to be smash hits with the ticket-buyers.

Booking acts requires a real familiarity with the community. Although the Music Circus and the Melody Tent share most of the acts, there are differences to be taken into consideration.

"Cape Cod draws a more transient audience, the summer vacationers. They're less interested in the older acts," Kasses explains. "The Melody Tent brings in the 30 to 40 crowd, a middle-of-the-road crowd, plus a younger crowd.

"They aren't as interested in Steve and Eydie or Johnny Mathis, but Chicago will sell more nights there than here."

Wayne Newton, the newest addition to the line-up, promises to be bigger with the Music Circus crowd than the Melody Tent as well.

Kasses has the task of balancing known box office hits with the acts that will develop a new audience. In recent years, he's been expanding the children's theater and adding more comics to the line-up to build an audience to last through the next two decades.

Kasses was delightfully surprised by ticket sales for "Sharon, Lois and Bram's Elephant Show," a children's musical group with a hit show on Nickelodeon. After the two shows originally booked sold out in rapid order, the Music Circus added a third performance. It's a lesson Kasses will keep in mind when planning for the summer of '92.

Kasses was also pleased to discover that many performers attract audiences across generational lines. The recent performances by Chicago drew Mom and Dad and their offspring, too. It's a trend that bodes well for the tents.

Looking at the demographics of the South Shore also suggests that attracting an older audience makes great business sense.

"We use senior citizens as volunteer ushers on the Cape," Kasses says. "They enjoy being around the theater and they get to see a free performance for every show they usher."

If children's programming was a gamble that paid off, efforts to bring back plays have proved disappointing.

When "Evita" played to a sold-out house two years ago, the management team thought plays were part of the wave of the future. This season Kasses booked "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Roman Forum" and "Driving Miss Daisy." He thought it was a can't-miss offering. But ticket sales to "A Funny Thing" were disappointing and "Miss Daisy" was such a bust that the play was cancelled.

Kasses has no explanation, other than the possibility that audiences had seen the movie version of "Miss Daisy" so recently that they just weren't interested.

Plays under the tent may be part of the past of the Music Circus. Just finding plays to book gets harder every year, Kasses says. With so few theaters-in-the-round remaining and such a scanty audience, not many companies are willing to invest the time and money it takes to mount a performance geared to the venue, he explains.

Once upon a time, performances of a play were scheduled for a week and performers had the week previous to rehearse. Kasses' guided tour includes viewing the circles on the wooden flooring of the old stable/rehearsal hall where actors tried out their blocking.

If the season at the Music Circus is all too short, the work that makes it possible goes on all year. Even before the tent comes down, Kasses and Peter Keppes are working on the booking for the following year. Booking performers requires the preparation and oversight of nearly 100 contracts. Kasses holds to one hard and fast rule in booking performers.

"They have to deliver both length and quality in their performance or they'll never come back," he says. He has no patience for performers who think merely showing up on stage counts.

From time to time, unanticipated crises arise — like Chicago getting stuck in a massive traffic jam coming off the Cape. The management explained the problem to the audience, the group opening for Chicago played longer than planned and when the group got to Cohasset they gave a full-length performance to the patient audience.

Despite the delay, only two members of the audience requested a ticket refund.

In return for giving a good show, performers who play Cohasset and Hyannis can count on being treated well by the management and the audience. It keeps many acts coming back for more.

"There is a meshing between the audience and the artist," Kasses explains.

The Music Circus spends time and money making sure performers have a comfortable place to wait before going on stage. Stars get a well-appointed suite of rooms and the staff makes sure all the performers are well-fed and happy before heading to the circular stage.

Performers who stay overnight take their meals in local restaurants and find accommodations at Kimball's.

As a non-profit organization, the Music Circus returns substantial money directly to the community through the parent company, South Shore Playhouse.

"We're the reason the South Shore Art Center exists," Kasses said. The art center is only one of many groups to benefit from grants awarded out of Music Center profits.

The Music Circus' owners also believe in sinking money into maintaining the theater and its grounds. They refurbish the theater frequently, landscape the grounds with trees, shrubs and flower beds and try to maintain all the facilities in top condition. Recently they replaced the sound system and the lighting grid.

The theater tries to maintain good relations with the town. Complaints about the decibel level of the music was one impetus for changes in the sound system. Management also chooses entertainers and schedules performances with the neighborhood in mind.

The Music Circus computerized operations several years ago. By pushing the right button, the computer reveals what percentage of a given show has been sold, what seats remain available or generates a mailing list of anyone who has ever purchased a ticket.

"We couldn't operate without the computers," Kasses says. As if to prove how critical computerization is for smooth operations, recently Smokey Robinson's performance was moved from July 26 to August 31. Thanks to the computer, old tickets and new tickets can be honored with no confusion about who will be sitting in what seat.

Future plans include expansion of the concessions area to match renovations already completed on the theater and the bathrooms.

"We like to run this venue in a certain manner," Kasses says. "The venue has to be part of the experience. It's like going out to dinner — you expect great service, great food and ambience.

"In a year like this when people are on a limited financial budget, an evening out should be a nice break. People should feel like they've really had a vacation."

The seasonal employees of the Music Circus will be getting a taste of the good life soon — the owners plan to pull down the old and tired horse stables and put up a two story office building.

The one thing the staff knows for sure is that Kasses and Keppes shared their discomfort — the head honchos have the least glamorous office space on the grounds.

"This is not a glamour job," Kasses says. And as he tries to solve the crisis of a sound board lost somewhere between Kansas and Cohasset because of a truck breakdown, stressful seems a more appropriate adjective.

Kasses and company make up for the stress with a laidback style. At this place, corporate culture seems to dictate dressing for comfort and kidding each other during non-performance hours.

Looking down at his casual attire and sockless deck shoes, Kasses quickly says, "I get dressed up for performances."

During the summer season, the Music Circus employs 125 residents and the Melody Tent makes do with 100 plus the volunteer ushers. Seasonal employees work in the mail room, on the telephone lines, usher, work in the business office, landscape and maintain the grounds and buildings.

Music Circus employees routinely begin as ushers in their high school years and come back year after year, advancing in job responsibilities as they go along.

"It becomes a learning experience for a lot of kids," Kasses says. "We let the kids learn the business by doing everything.

"I used to hire a secretary, but now I have them do their own typing."

Don't be misled by the laughter and the casual clothes. Behind the easy-going exterior is a commitment to excellence. The combination of fun and seriousness keeps both entertainers and employees coming back for more.

When the current season comes to an end and the big tent comes down, Kasses, Keppes and four other employees keep working toward the next season. In addition to booking the acts, there are brochures to design, ticket sales campaigns to orchestra and renovations to plan.

The headquarters for these activities moves to New Jersey where Kasses maintains winter offices. But just as summer follows winter, that big green tent will go up again one fine morning in June.

You can count on it.

'Housesitter' schedule detailed

• On Monday, August 19, interior and exterior scenes at a grocery store the company created at Depot Court will be filmed.

• On August 20 shooting will continue on Main Street and at the Cohasset Hardware.

After several weeks at other locations, the film company will return to Cohasset's town green to film the final scene in the movie on Oct.7. Williams said the film's director (Frank Oz) moved the town green scenes to the end of the shoot to keep continuity with the script. He is also hoping to catch some fall foliage, he said.

Williams said the town may get more than the eight trees that were promised as part of the original contract.

He said it was possible the town may get up to one dozen fruitless pear trees by the end of the shoot.

Williams said the production company's greenskeeper has been working with Peter Laugelle of the tree, park, and cemetery department to plant the trees.

In addition to a $5,000 location fee that will be paid to the town, several other municipal fees will also apply.

Among these charges are:

• A police detail rate of $23, plus 10 percent, plus FICA with a four hour minimum.

• Use of a police cruiser will cost $25 per hour, plus the cost of an officer. The cruiser will be allowed to depart for emergencies.

• Street line painting will cost $8.44 per gallon for yellow paint, $12.19 per gallon for white paint.

• Use of the town hall auditorium will cost $200 per day plus time-and-a-half pay for a custodian.

The town had originally offered to rent space in the town parking lot for $15 per space per day. Williams has objected to this charge, calling it a "city rate." Further negotiations will be held to settle the matter.

Junior sailing news: Spectacular describes the sailing

By Woody Chittick
Cohasset Yacht Club,
Junior Activities

The Junior Racing program at the Cohasset Yacht Club got off to a spectacular start two weeks ago with coach Jon Ostrom's teams winning two championship trophies and placing among the top three in other matches. Victories began July 13 to 14, with Joe Menis, representing the CYC Racing Team, winning the Mass. Bay Junior Singlehanded Championship (Curtis Trophy) at the Lipton Cup Regatta. Joe sailed his Laser flawlessly and, in winning, qualified for the Area A's, which were held July 31 at the Corinthian Yacht Club in Marblehead.

On July 16 to 17, Mike Welch and Hillary Chute raced against sixteen other teams on the Charles River for the YRUMB Junior Doublehanded Championship (Francis Charles Trophy)—the largest number of entrants in history. Seventeen races in Larks left all teams exhausted, but as winds picked up to 15 knots on the second day, the CYC team began to move up in the standings. In the final race, a broken rudder seemed to spell disaster, but breakdown points gave CYC Second Place overall. On July 27 to 28, Mike and Hillary went on to Portland, Maine, where they competed in the Area A's, this time in 420's; they sailed to achieve another outstanding Second Place.

Also July 16 to 17, at the Manchester Yacht Club, Tyler Studds (skipper), Ben Chittick, and Dave Nothnagle competed for the Mass. Bay Junior Triplehanded Championship against eight other clubs. Sailing in Rhodes 19's was a new experience for the boys, but they won the Finlay Trophy (South Shore Champions) and achieved Third Place overall for the Gray Trophy—2 points behind Pleon (winner of both the Gray and Curtis [North Shore] Trophies. Cohasset missed Second Place by the narrowest of margins: the team had 14-3/4 points—only 1/4 point behind Community Boating Club's 14-1/2 points. Other competitors, in order of finishing, were Hingham, Cottage Part, Annisquam, Manchester, Cohasset Sailing Club, and Scituate Harbor.

On Thursday, July 18, the Hingham Bay Junior Regatta saw a full contingent of CYC sailors coached by Jon Ostrom and Jen Drohan. Conditions varied greatly, with light morning winds picking up by mid-afternoon to 12-15 knots. (Unfortunately, due to a lack of wind on Friday, that day's races were cancelled.) In a highly competitive nine-boat Laser fleet, Tyler Studds came in second, and David Nothnagle was fourth. Were it not for a post-race technical penalty, Dave would have finished second. Dave was gracious despite this setback, remarking, "We had good competition, especially from Hingham, and Matt Pierce and Tim Herzog of the Cohasset Sailing Club."

In the 420 series, Matt Larson and Chloe Chittick finished third of eight, behind Pleon and Hingham Yacht Club. Due to light winds, the morning course was shortened; the team of Ben Manning and Liz Good finished sixth, while Ryan Staszko and Megan McNamara came in seventh. All were cheered on in their first regatta by alternates, Ian Simons and Jessie Hurley. "This was our first race in 420's," said Chloe Chittick..."We're looking forward to many more races," chimed in Megan McNamara. In a huge field of about 30 Turnabouts, sailing for the first time in this type of boat, Matt Verrochi and Carl Dean did exceptionally well, finishing in the top twelve.

Replicating Minot's beacon is a work of love

Herb Jason works on the steel frame of the second stage.

Volunteers work on the replica of the Minot's Light beacon.

'For many years, since 1917 in fact, when the Sandy Beach Association was formed to hold the beach area for public use, it was thought that there would be no further water front areas available for the public. In 1946, however, the Government Island tract, bordering the harbor, was offered for sale as surplus property. At a special town meeting the town exercised its option to purchase the property for recreational or utilitarian purposes, for the benefit of its citizens. The historic spot, where the granite blocks which went into the building of Minot's Light, were shaped and fitted before being transported to the light became town property.'

with a series of 36 windows. Each of the windows will be dedicated in memory or in honor or someone. Twenty of them have already been spoken for. Detail work on the outside, fittings and railings will wait until next year.

More checks can still be sent to move the work along. Tax deductible donations should be sent to: The Captain's Walk, Cohasset Historical Commission, 43 Elm Street, Cohasset, MA 02025.

Herb Jason sees the project continuing after the replica is built. He would be willing to refurbish the old kerosene house, actually a brick shed, using copper containers and artifacts.

He sees the old barn-like office — once used by Capt. Barton Alexander, the man who engineered the lighthouse back in the 1860s — as a place he'd like to restore. He said it would make a great museum.

The office is in the building next to the old lighthouse keepers duplex on the rocks of Government Island.

A citizens committee is currently looking into possible sources of money for the restoration of the lighthouse keepers house, as well as possible public uses.

"As long as they don't touch the outside, that would be fine," the craftsman and lover of history said.

One of his next projects will be to encourage the town to change the name of the place.

He thinks Lighthouse Island has a nice ring to it.

No Vo-Tech increase

The South Shore Vo-Tech school committee eliminated a budget increase last week after half its member towns refused to pay $175,000 more to send their children to vocational school. The board also postponed plans to combine the Hanover and Abington campuses.

Paring the budget to $4.3-million, the committee tentatively approved eliminating several coaching positions, club advisors, aids, a guidance counselor and a nurse.

Committee members also voted unanimously to freeze salaries of non-union employees and said four administrators and four secretaries will not receive raises next year.

The original budget proposal was rejected by town meetings in Hanson, Abington, Whitman and Rockland. If two of the four towns approve the latest budget by late August, the level-funded budget will be adopted. (Other towns in the 409-student system — Hanover, Norwell, Scituate and Cohasset — approved the higher budget earlier and do not need to vote again on the reduced budget.)

Rockland and Abington are more likely to support the budget without further cuts because their contributions would not change much, said Committee Chairman Robert L. Molla, Jr.

Hanson and Whitman, however, face steep increases if the budget is approved because they have more students attending the vocational school. Hanson would pay 11 percent more and Whitman would pay 16 percent more than they did last year.

"If we can get Abington and Rockland to agree (to support the budget)," Molla said, "Whitman and Hanson must pay if they want to remain in the system."

SAFE urges residents to comment on Cohasset Heights

SAFE today urged residents to comment on the Existing Facility Permit Application (EFPA) filed by the Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL).

"We urge Cohasset residents to review the EFPA, and to send their comments to the state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP)," said Alix White, President of SAFE. "Copies of the EFPA are available at the Paul Pratt Library. Just ask for it at the desk."

"This EFPA is important," said John McNabb, Jr., Vice-President of SAFE, "because, under new state regulations, if this EFPA is denied, then CHL is out of business. In the EFPA, CHL is supposed to describe how they deal with odor, water contamination, wetlands damage, and other problems, as well as all relevant aspects of the landfill operation."

"However," said McNabb, "our review shows that the EFPA does not contain all the required information, that it shows many areas where CHL is violating state or local regulations, and that it shows that CHL is not adequately dealing with problems such as odor, water contamination, and wetlands damage."

"Comment on the EFPA by writing to Commissioner Daniel S. Greenbaum, DEP, 3rd Floor, One Winter Street, Boston, MA 02108," said McNabb. "Start the letter by saying you are 'requesting an advisory opinion, under section 8 of chapter 30A of the General Laws, whether the EFPA is consistent with all applicable state laws and regulations.' Then, mention the issues you are most concerned with, and ask DEP to address that issue."

"We plan to discuss the EFPA at the August 13 meeting of the Board of Health," said White. "We urge Cohasset residents to attend that meeting and to make their views known."

Mammography screening

The Cohasset Social Service League announces that they will again be sponsoring a Mobile Mammography Service, according to Judy Fitzsimmons.

This fully equipped van makes it easier for women to have mammograms. Most women who have not had one, give inconvenience and cost as the reasons. This service is more convenient, less expensive, and is accredited by the American College of Radiology. The best means of controlling breast cancer is through early detection. Breast Cancer is 90 percent curable, if found early. Schedule your mammogram today! It only takes 20 to 30 minutes of your time. The one thing worse than having breast cancer, is having it and not knowing it.

Mammography screening is Saturday, Sept. 7 from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

The van will be near town hall. Appointments are needed.

American Cancer Society guidelines: 35 to 39 years of age - one baseline mammogram. 40 to 49 years of age - a mammogram every one to two years. Over 50 years of age - a mammogram every year. Under 35, a doctor's order required.

Mobile Diagnostics, Inc. of Wellesley provides a fully equipped coach which is comfortable, private and staffed by registered, female technologists. The equipment is a state-of-the-art low dose mammography unit. The x-rays are read by board-certified radiologists, and the results will be sent to you and your physician. MDI is accredited by the American College of Radiology.

Recent Massachusetts legislation mandates that, with a few exceptions, insurance companies must provide coverage for mammograms.

The average area cost for mammography is $120 to $200. The total cost with Mobile Diagnostics is $102 and they will bill your insurance company for this amount. If you have no insurance or your insurance does not cover this test, you can take advantage of the $80 cash price, payable on the day of the exam only: by cash, check, Mastercard or Visa. Some HMOs may require you to have mammography at their own facility and all HMOs require written permission or referral forms.

Medicare covers the cost of a mammogram every other year after you have met any deductibles.

For appointments, call 383-0771.

Wanted: Volunteers in Cohasset

Patriots' Trail Girl Scout Council is now on the lookout for women and men in the Cohasset area to volunteer for the Girl Scouts and Girl Scout activities. Wide range of exciting volunteer opportunities available. No experience necessary; training will be provided. South Shore Soccer Camp

Registration for South Shore Soccer Camp continues for boys and girls 8 to 18, but may have to be curtailed in the near future, due to the numbers.

If you are interested in registering for South Shore Soccer Camp, call Cohasset Recreation Department, first floor, Cohasset Town Hall, or call 383-6791.

Soccer Camp for boys will be held during the week of August 5 to 9 and for girls, the week of August 12 to 16. Both camps will meet daily from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. at Milliken Field. The cost for camp is $159 and discounts are available for additional children registering from the same family, as well as team enrollment discounts. South Shore Soccer represents top flight soccer training, delivered by top college and high school coaches and players, from the New England area.

Co-Directing South Shore Soccer Camp are Jon Anderson, head varsity coach at Babson College and Larry Shultz, soccer coach, administrator and coordinator for many area soccer programs. Anderson has been head soccer coach at Babson College and director of Babson's Soccer Camps, for the past six years. He was the 1989 E.M.S.C.A. College Coach of the Year and has a decade of coaching experience at the varsity level, including five years as head boys coach at Cohasset High School. Shultz, with 24 years' teaching experience in the Cohasset school system, is a former president of the Cohasset Soccer Club, a licensed ASYSA official, U-19 Coach, Cohasset J.V. Boy's Soccer Coach and former MYSA District, U-19 Coach. Shultz was instrumentally involved organizing and administrating various area soccer programs during the past two decades.

Conservation & selectmen find peace

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

The conservation commission and selectmen met Monday night to work on improving their strained relationship.

For several months a feud of sorts, has simmered between the two bodies over how the commission handles its duties and whether three senior members should be reappointed.

At Monday night's meeting the tone was cordial, but occasionally strained as the board's discussed their differences.

Problems came to a head several weeks ago when the reappointment of three members of the commission, (Chairman Merle Brown, Jeff Waal, and William Parmenter) were delayed. Each of the three claimed selectmen planned to replace at least one of them. Age, controversial stands and the need for "new blood" on the commission were cited as possible reasons for the board's motivation.

At the meeting, selectman Jane Goedecke denied there was a vendetta against the commission or any individual member. She said it was the board's position not to automatically reappoint members to any commission or committee.

Goedecke said selectmen tried to avoid controversy throughout the process.

"We didn't want it to be perceived as personal," selectman Diana Kornet said, agreeing with Goedecke.

Brown said it appeared his commission was the only one selectmen held to this new policy. He said other town appointments still seemed to be "automatic."

He told selectmen if there were any problems they, or others, had with the commission or any of its members, they should have been notified prior to the reappointment season.

"If we ever do anything wrong we would like to hear about it," Brown said. "If you have problems, let us know three or four months prior to nominations. We couldn't react to what happened the last time around."

Goedecke said it was "impossible" for her board to go to the commission's posted meetings.

"We understand that, but I do have a problem with not knowing there is a problem," Brown said. He said a phone call or letter addressing a problem would at least alert him.

Kornet suggested that Brown notify selectmen if he suspected there was going to be a problem so that they did not have to operate from hearsay.

She said her concerns had to do with "style" rather than the committee's work.

"The comments I have are about process," she said. "I recognize that you may have had some difficult people coming to you. (My concerns are) not about specific rulings as the appearance of how you handle it." She said there was a town-wide stereotype of the commission being a "little board of commissars.""Its

Appointing Authority wins interest and first-time crowd

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

Lobbying by the anti-dump expansion group, SAFE, failed to keep Wayne Shawchuk from being appointed to a second term on the advisory board.

But, most likely, he will no longer act as liason between the advisors and the board of health.

The town's appointing authority met Tuesday at town hall to consider a number of appointments and reappointments. William Weeks, town moderator, Arne Gjesteby, chairman of the advisory board, and Ned Tebbetts, chairman of the board of selectmen — all agreed to wait until the beginning of September before making two new appointments to the advisory board. In the meantime a list of candidates will be screened individually.

But some appointments were handled by the town's so-called Troika.

Sawchuk's reappointment raised the only public discussion at the appointing authority in recent memory.

The room was not crowded. But about 10 residents took the time to watch the proceedings. Most had comments or questions about the reappointment.

Sawchuk has served on the advisory board about a year and a half. He won the support of Gjesteby and former advisory board chairman Raymond Kasperowicz.

"Remember we are not talking abotu a $50,000 job here but about someone who volunteers his time," Kasperowicz said.

"Are you looking for a blood sacrifice?" He pointed out that the committee tends to dilute anyone's opinion.

Sawchuk admits to having a conflict of interest on the issue of the Cohasset Heights Landfill, CHL, the private dump located off Route 3A. He has worked as a consultant and construction contractor in the past eight years. He said he has not worked for CHL in the past year.

Both John McNabb and Alix White, leaders of SAFE, wrote to members of the Troika to oppose the reappointment. Both of them restated their opposition during the meeting.

The letter protested the fact that Sawchuk has sat on decisions involving the board of health budget. The board of health is the town agency involved in the ongoing controversy about the operation of the private landfill at CHL.

The letter complained that Sawchuk did not make his conflict known until questioned.

Weeks said his own records showed Shawchuk had made his possible conflict known and that he said he was speaking as an individual when he addressed town meeting in June on the non-binding resolution.

Sawchuk, who was present during the meeting, said he had not heard the actual contents of the letter before the meeting.

He pointed out he has served on the planning board and capital budget committee in the past.

Sawchuk questioned whether one issue should be that important and whether he had a right to express his view on an issue like the future of Cohasset Heights.

He said he believes the town has more to gain by negotiating a closure agreement with CHL as part of an expansion plan.

Going for the bizarre with YPST's 'The Bald Soprano'

By Lee Todd Lacks
Mariner correspondent

Is there anyone at the door when the doorbell rings? Should the doctor go down with his patient? Who is Donald Martin? I found the answers to these and many other intriguing questions after attending "The Bald Soprano," an anti-play by Eugene Ionesco which was presented by the Young People's Summer Theater this past weekend. "The Bald Soprano" is an absurd drama which satirizes proper etiquette and sound logic. From the opening scene to the anti-climax, "The Bald Soprano" challenges the audience to reexamine its sense of sense. The play itself deals with a group of eccentrics from the suburbs of London who struggle to understand each other. The action takes place in the parlor of Mr. and Mrs. Smith, played by Douglas Moe and Carolyn Hunt. The clock in the parlor does not have any hands, thus implying that the play is not set at any particular time. As the play begins, Mr. and Mrs. Smith are preparing to entertain their friends, Mr. and Mrs. Martin, played by David J. Dowling and Merideth Finn. The Martins make a delightful entrance when they take their places at opposite

Beechwood nets up, Osgood will be next

By Peter Kasperowicz

The Beechwood basketball courts underwent a facelift last week, an operation that included resurfacing and the installation of two new poles, rims and nets. Still to come is some paint for the blacktop and a taller chainlink fence,

Appointments made

Some appointments were handled by the town appointing authority Tuesday night.

All were by unanious vote.

Jean Muir of Old Pasture Road was appointed to the government structure committee. She replaces Jean Cotton who had served two terms and so could not continue.

Reappointed to government structure were F. Roy Fitzsimmons and Patricia Facey.

Barbara J. Moore was reappointed to the personnel committee.

Mark Baker of Nichols Road was appointed to the capital budget committee to replace Joseph McElroy who opted not to seek another term.

Baker is a pension fund analyst in the state treasurer's office.

G. Robert Jackson was reappointed to the capital budget committee.

Thomas Cook was reappointed to the drainage advisory committee, pending his willingness to serve another term.

Kathleen Fox was reappointed to the design review board.

Cornelia O'Malley, an original member of the permanent bylaw committee, is leaving the board. She is 85. An attorney is being sought for this position, according to the bylaw.

Toxins on the increase

The conservation commission may be able to help the board of health evaluate the impact of the Cohasset Heights Landfill.

The controversial landfill is currently undergoing a review process for a proposed expansion that would double its size.

For months, town officials and interested residents have tried to decipher the results of regular testing of the landfill's surface water wells.

Jeff Waal, a member of the conservation commission, has made the task a little easier by plugging the results into easy-to-read graphs.

Waal said he plans to submit the graphs to the board of health to aid them in monitoring the effects of the landfill.

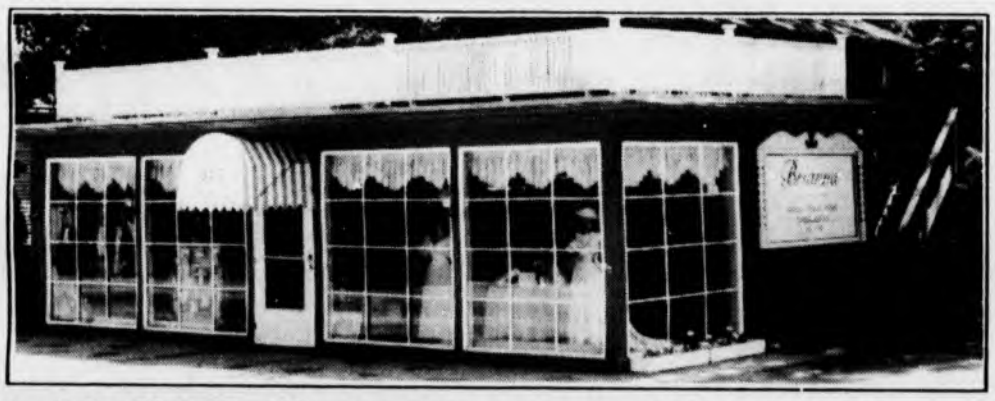
He said the graphs, in most cases, show that traces of hazardous chemicals and particles in the surface water have been steadily increasing over the past decade.

Waal said that although some results show dramatic climbs and drops, changes he could not explain, concentrations of sodium, lead, iron, chloride have been on an "upward trend" and may have a "cumulative effect."

The graph uses results from July, 1986 up to November 1990.

Although Waal and others in his committee admitted the results "do not have enough information" to make a definite determination and need "scientific support," he said the results could indicate a detrimental affect on wetlands.

Waal said there should be another study of the effects of the landfill on wetlands because "there has been a definite upward trend" in the concentration of solids in the water since 1988. He said the commission plans to submit the graphs to the board of health in time for their scheduled meeting next week.



Fun at the playground was the theme for last Friday as the recreation department went all out to make the day bright for the children enrolled in the summer playgound program.

Pollution count at Sandy Beach is low

The water at Cohasset Beaches, especially Sandy Beach, is about as clean as beach water gets, according Joseph Godzik, Cohasset's health agent.

Godzik said the Sandy Beach is tested weekly for fecal coliform colonies, a bacteria that can pose a health risk to bathers.

According to the most recent results available (taken July, 10), the beach tested positive for 7 colonies per 100 milliliters of water. Godzik said this count is well below the 200 colony count the state accepts as standard. If the count rose above 200, the beach would be closed.

On the day of the test two people were in the water, and 50 were on the beach itself.

On July 3, the 70 degree water tested positive for 15 colonies.

Godzik said he was at a loss to explain the very low counts throughout town. He said Black Rock Beach, which normally tests higher than any other beach, has, on average, had the lowest count this year.

Godzik said most beaches south of Hingham have reported low counts all summer. He said only one beach, Peggoty Beach in Scituate, has tested higher than 200 colonies this summer.

Godzik said efforts to clean Boston Harbor might be partly to credit for the clean beaches, but he said any number of influences could be responsible.

"It may just be the luck of the draw," he said.

Other results of the July 10 testing are:

- The Cohasset Sailing Club, 3 colonies per 100 ml.
- The Yacht Club, 3 colonies per 100 ml.
- Black Rock Beach, 10 colonies per 100 ml.

Conservation and selectmen find peace

'how' you handle your rulings rather than the specifics of the rulings. The whole issue is in how you deal with the public."

Goedecke agreed that "how" the committee does its job is just as important as the job itself.

"People in general still have the feeling that if they mow their lawns...and they are near a marshland they could get a ticket," she said. "Some of this is public relations and some of this is reality.

"The more user-friendly you appear, the more likely you are to have people go through the process willingly."

Kornet said she and fellow board members did not discuss the reasons they considered not reappointing a member "out of respect for the privacy of the individual."

"You need to make decisions in good conscience, sometimes it is important for the public to accept that," she said.

Brown admitted that the commission, because of its mandate, often looks villainous to townspeople, contractors, and developers that come before them. He said part of this misconception comes from misunderstanding about what the commission does and why they do it. He said within the next few months the commission will distribute an updated pamphlet describing their duties and the state laws that govern them.

Kornet also suggested either trimming the seven-member commission to five members or appointing associate members to help with their workload.

"It is a pretty daunting thing to have a seven-person committee," she said.

Brown said state law requires a seven-member commission. He said they had considered requesting associate members that could be trained to take over as permanent members and said he would investigate the possibility.

The commission, almost unanimously, told the board they would like to have a part-time conservation agent to work with them.

Brown said most surrounding towns have a conservation agent, and suggested a "regional" approach with another town, such as Marshfield, to share one.

Babysitting experts

The following girls have successfully attended the Cohasset Community Center's Babysitting course instructed by Linda Farrag: Jill Magner, Jami Butman, Kaitlin Malley and Meredith O'Hayre.

Cohasset's Police Safety Officer, Clifford Jones, participated in the class answering many questions. He brought the video "Amy" for the class to see. Captain Lincoln and firefighter Jim Curley spoke to the group about fire safety and prevention.

Appointing Authority wins interest and first-time crowd

Ron Goodwin, a member of SAFE and a water commissioner, said the problem is Sawchuk fails to recognize the possible conflict and won't back off from taking a stand.

Tanna Kasperowicz asked whether the Troika might do something about the whole issue of conflict of interest. She said that Selectman Rocco Laugelle went into an executive session dealing with the town's health insurance last week despite the fact that some of his family members may be covered by the health plan.

Gjesteby said he would recommend that the new chairman of the advisory board give Sawchuk a different assignment in the future. He talked about Sawchuk's value to the committee as someone with local experience.

The vote on Sawchuk was 2-1 with Tebbetts opposed. Just before the vote, the Troika discussed whether an appointment need be unanimous. The decision was that in the case of a reappointment, a majority vote would suffice.

While the custom has been to require a unanimous vote, Tebbetts said his discussion with town counsel indicates a majority is sufficient. While no one disagreed with that, the other two members said they were willing to continue with the practice. Tebbetts said he wants a written opinion from town counsel.

Robert Davenport, a cable volunteer, told the committee he disagrees with the idea of spending money on an opinion when they already know the answer.

"It's a waste of town money," Davenport said.

Among the people who are under discussion for the two open seats on the advisory board are:

- Karin Bartow of Sohier Street, a suggestion of Gjesteby.
- Leland Jenkins of Jerusalem Road, another suggestion of Gjesteby.
- Joseph McElroy, who just stepped down from the capital budget committee, another of Gjesteby's suggestions.
- Robert Jordan Jr., a suggestion of Tebbetts.
- Millie Mitman, another Tebbetts suggestion.
- Tom Reardon, whose brother served on the school committee in the past.
- Locke Tousley, another Tebbetts nominee.
- Paul Pattison, another Tebbetts suggestion.
- Susan Killilea, another Tebbetts name.

(Most of Tebbetts nominations were not yet about their willingness to serve.

- Sue Brister of Forest Avenue, a suggestion of Weeks.
- Judy Kasameyer of Pond Street, a suggestion of Weeks.
- Joanne Chittick of South Main Street, a suggestion of Weeks.
- John Anson Whealler of Jerusalem Road, a suggestion of Weeks, and someone only recently appointed to the board of appeals.
- John or Mary Hartshorne of Border Street, a suggestion of Weeks.
- Donna McGee of Hill Street, whose name was brought by by Weeks on the recommendation of Tebbetts.
- Sue McNamara of Fairoaks Lane, a suggestion of Weeks.
- Chartis Langmaid of Beechwood St., a suggestion of Weeks.
- Kenneth Ingber of Beechwood St., a suggestion of Weeks.
- Monica McKenney of Spring St., a suggestion of Weeks.
- Deborah Cook of King Street, a suggestion of Weeks.
- Georgine Butman of Cushing Road, a suggestion of Weeks.

Gjesteby cannot continue on the advisory board for another term because of the limit specified in the bylaw of two full terms. John Mullett has declined reappointment to the board.

Beechwood nets installed, Osgood will be next

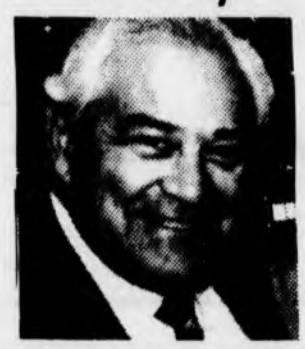
but the court is essentially finished.

In a press release, Recreation Director Jack Worley thanked Harold Litchfield and the Highway Department for their services. "No revenue existed for...the associated costs of laying the hot top. Through foresight, careful planning and precise coordination of material and men, Mr. Litchfield, Supt. of the Highway Department managed to resurface the court."

Money for the project came from the Beechwood Improvement Association Fund. The trust was created primarily for "recreational needs of the Beechwood area children/youth" explained Worley.

Also thanked in the letter was Arnie Reppucci, CHS Varsity basketball coach, who provided technical assistance to the project. "There's such an athletic tradition in this town, it's about time we had some courts to play on."

Reppucci is also involved in the restoration of the Osgood court, which has already been resurfaced by the Highway Department. The new equipment, funded by the Basketball Boosters Club, is expected in about one week.



Reppucci hopes the courts will encourage play among all ages, and sees the courts as a potential breeding ground for new varsity players.

Reppucci adds: "I would ask users of the new courts to police them so physical abuse won't happen. It doesn't happen in other towns, so why should it happen here?"

"Outlaw" Willie Nelson performs at the Music Circus

By Bruce Compton
Mariner correspondent

An attractive young redhead approached Willie Nelson stageside with a bouquet of roses, the first of the evening for the performer.

"When I hug some girl in the front row," Nelson says, "I'll reach over and put my arm around her, and some other girl will give me a flower and I'll kiss her, and the rushes of excitement will wash through the crowd like the waves of the ocean, touching everyone."

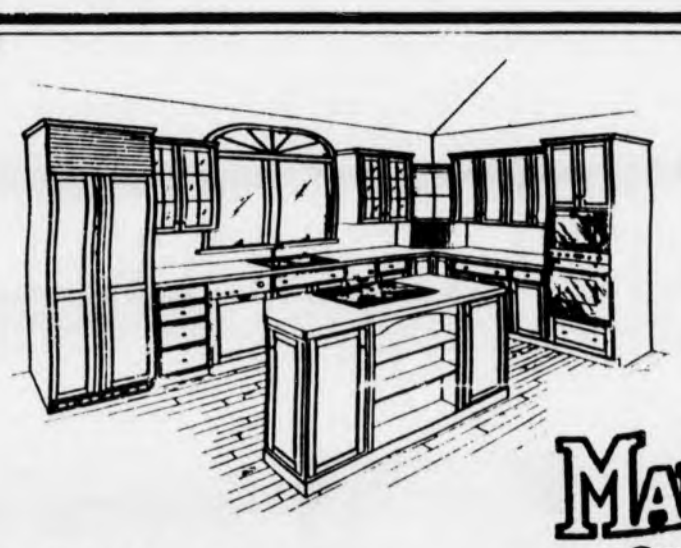
That's just what happened at the South Shore Music Circus, Thursday evening, Aug. 1, as the legendary "outlaw of country music," Willie Nelson, had the crowd on his side through a reflective batch of tunes ranging from country blues to some of his favorite popular standards.

Rejuvenated after playing a round of golf at the South Shore Country Club in Hingham earlier in the day, Nelson stood erect, with a red headband holding his waist-length auburn hair back over his Cherokee brow; he wore a tank top, blue jeans, a thick black leather belt with inlaid silver medallions, and a pair of running shoes; a red, white and blue guitar strap supported his prehistoric Martin acoustic. A broad, winning smile that has been characterized as "straight out of Huckleberry Finn" completed the wardrobe.

His long-time together eight-piece band included three guitars, drums, harmonica, a percussion section, an organ, and his sister Bobbie on piano. As the set opened predictably with "Whiskey River," Nelson's tight, nasal voice with its warm resonance permeated the atmosphere. His style is distinct from most other country artists in that he leaves off the twang. "One interesting thing that has happened to our band, he says, is that in the last few years we have picked up the tempo without realizing it. Sometimes I'll hear an old version of "Whiskey River" played on the air, and I'm surprised at how laid back we used to sound."

Nelson toted his famous guitar, autographed by several of his acquaintances. "I wore the hole in the body," he says, "because classical guitars like the Martin are not meant to be played with a pick. The hole looks soulful, but it's just a hole. I've got such a terrific tone out of the guitar because it's a good guitar to begin with and then putting all that electronic equipment in it just happened to work exactly right, and there is just enough beer spilled in the amplifier to give it the perfect tone for me."

A vibrant harmonica solo on "If You've Got the Money, Honey, I've Got the Time" got the crowd clapping along. "Lovin' You Was Easier (Than Anything I'll Ever Do Again)," with its wailing lead guitar, was done in a slower tempo. "It's a beautiful, sad song that bowled me over the moment I first heard it — one of the haunting melodies you can't get out of your mind, with lines that really stick." Sister Bobbie handled the acoustic piano on "You Were Always On My Mind" until the band joined in. The mournful "Help Me Make It Through the Night" also generated a warm response. Nelson displayed a knack for bending the strings in one of the Grammy-winning songs which propelled him to stardom, "Blue Eyes Cryin' in the Rain." Backing vocalists joined him for the melancholy ballad, "Sweet Memories."



Nelson's early memories are not that sweet, though. He and his sister Bobbie struggled growing up with their grandparents in Oklahoma. The children helped earn their way by picking cotton. The grandparents involved Willie in gospel music, which gave him a lasting feeling for the church itself. He dropped out of high school to work as a musician, and found himself selling Bibles and vacuum cleaners door-to-door, while trying to make a living at the "Bloody Bucket," a rough club in Fort Worth. Willie married his first wife, a Cherokee Indian carhop he met at a restaurant, when they were sixteen. In 1961, he sold the copyright to "Night Life" (which eventually was recorded by more than 70 artists and sold 30 million copies) to three Houston businessmen for $150, bought a second-hand Buick, and left Fort Worth for Nashville, hoping to become a country music star.

Nelson performed "Crazy," a song which he says could have enabled him to retire at age 30 off royalties had Patsy Cline not made a hit out of it in 1961. One of his favorite songs, "All of Me," had a locomotive-like snare running all through it. Willie was accompanied by backing vocals on "Seven Spanish Angles." The band jammed tightly on another of Nelson's favorite songs, "Blue Skies," which drew nothing but raves. On "Bloody Mary Morning," from country music's first concept album, 1971's "Yesterday's Wine," the percussionist made interesting use of his cowbells, hanging xylophone, and bongos. The cantankerous sound resulted in one of the evening's loudest ovations. Dozens of caps came flying onto the stage during the playing of "Good-Hearted Woman," a Grammy-winning single. "City of New Orleans" had the crowd involved; "Working Man's Blues" lamented the strife and hardship of America's farmer.

Nelson identifies strongly with the poor. Graciously and proudly, he welcomes those who are troubled into his Texas home on the 775-acre ranch outside Austin. "That's what life is all about," he says, "Helping each other if we can." With a recording studio on his property, he says he can "cut ten sides of a record in one day." He displayed that kind of work ethic in 1985, releasing no less than four albums that year, including the Cash — Jennings — Kristofferson collaboration, "Highwaymen," which helped to earn him Country Music Entertainer of the Year.

The band performed the reflective "To All the Girls I Loved Before," a monster hit. Nelson's favorite song of all time, "Stardust," written by Hoagy Carmichael, paved the way for the grizzled country singers to perform pop standards. Its slow lead guitar solo drew a favorable reaction. One of Nelson's favorite songs that he wrote, "Angel Flying Too Close to the Ground" was well-received, as was "Georgia on My Mind." Subdued lavendar and light blue lighting on "Amazing Grace" produced a temporary calming effect. "My Heroes Will Always Be Cowboys" led into "Mamas, Don't Let Your Babies Grow Up To Be Cowboys," a Grammy-winner originally performed by Waylon Jennings. "On the Road Again," another of Willie's favorites, ensued with a standing ovation.

An authentic folk hero of our time, Nelson has come a long way since he traded "Night Life" for a beat-up Buick. Perhaps Nelson's astrologer can foresee the direction of his music as succinctly as anyone: "He is a man that will live to be very old and will be creative all of his life. His music grows with him but his music will go to another dimension. It will be more symbolic in deeper meanings so that it will almost be religious."

Regionalization begins to gain political following

By Joseph Mont

Hingham, Hull and Cohasset have re-formed a tri-town committee abandoned in the early '80s to seek solutions to their common problems. The committee is already at work, investigating cooperative buying between the towns.

The committee, chaired by State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray (R-Cohasset), first met several years ago during the so-called "Massachusetts Miracle's" state-wide economic boom. Now, times have changed and in the shadow of declining revenues and state aid cuts the committee has reformed.

On July 31, the committee held its first meeting at Hingham's town office building.

Cohasset selectman Ned Tebbetts, selectman Kevin Costello of Hingham, and Hull selectman Lawrence Chirillo represented their town's at the meeting.

Murray described the committee as a scaled down version of the South Shore Coalition, which includes representatives of 10 towns. She said by working on a smaller scale, she hopes to get more immediate results.

The meeting focused on establishing central purchasing system for the three towns. According to Costello, the towns could save considerable money by combining orders and bulk purchasing equipment and supplies, such as fuel and tires.

Costello said he has already asked Hingham department heads to provide a list of what they buy, where they buy it, and what they pay for it.

He said if the other two towns did the same, they could compare notes and decide what can be bulk purchased, and determine the cost savings.

"There would be savings with bulk purchasing, whether it is school supplies or tires," Costello said.

On Murray's suggestion, the committee will investigate a central purchasing system already in place for the towns of Somerset, Swansea and Rehobeth.

At the committee's next meeting, at the end of the summer, the three representatives will report their findings and arrange to implement the plan.

Another unique idea the committee is looking at is using recycled oil for their heating fuel.

Chirillo said there is a company that takes used oil, (from cars, boats and machinery), filters out impurities and treats it so it can be burned as heating fuel in furnaces. He said the towns would be responsible for collecting the oil and paying to have it treated, but the cost savings over buying fuel at market prices would be substantial.

Although it falls outside of their scope, the committee also discussed getting their budgets under control through wage freezes.

The three agreed that a wage freeze would save jobs and help control spending, but they debated how the town could maintain "good faith" collective bargaining if they pushed to hold for a freeze.

Murray said California recently passed a resolution that no local aid be given to cities and towns that give their employees raises. She predicted that other states would soon enact similar measures.

Chirillo said that Hull tried a one-year freeze but "no one would go along with it."

"It was the hardest thing in the world for me (to ask for a freeze), especially being a union representative," he said. "It is so hard to try to get a freeze on wages."

Ronald Thompson, a lieutenant in the Hingham fire department who attended the meeting, said he, personally, would agree to a one-year freeze, but he warned about anything more.

"You are going to wind-up with all the good people going to other jobs," he said. "If you (freeze wages) for two, three of four years, all of a sudden there will be a loss of people."

The committee also discussed infrastructure repair in the three towns and a study needed to control the area's midge problem with the pesticide ABATE.

Costello said he was hopeful the committee would soon work out the details for central purchasing.

"If we have a few small victories from the start we can build on that," he said.

Weld's cuts were for the birds (or the bird-brained)

It's time to let Gov. William Weld know what we think of his idea of a state budget. What we think of it is: Not much.

We think the man behind this tragedy should be drawn and quartered for gross misrepresentation and fiscal irresponsibility.

We cannot understand what became of the man we heard on the campaign trail not long ago — the man who talked about backing a stable figure for local aid.

We agree with the Massachusetts Municipal Association, MMA, in categorizing the budget process this year as "appalling."

The budget passed in both branches by secret ballot. Information about the contents — never abundant — was totally absent.

Indeed, it is only now, several weeks later, that the facts are coming to light.

Normally we shy away from spending our precious editorial space on questions of state government or mismanagement.

The local aid cuts hurt us all.

We have lost respect for the man behind these cuts.

We feel betrayed.

The answer to the taxing question is not an override designed to hike our property tax.

The answer is: to demand state government live up to its responsibility to back quality education in all the state's communities.

The answer is: to demand the new governor live up to the campaign promises he made so recently.

Apparently the governor believes good things come to people who can afford them. His way of handling a tight state budget is to put the burden on others.

Apparently we, the people, haven't been vocal enough. No one seems to have paid attention to the vote on Referendum 5 last year, the vote that supported stable or increasing local aid.

Apparently we need to call and write this new governor and let him hear what we think about the weight he is placing on our property tax, our school system, and our economy.

To quote the MMA's legislative report of July 12: "The Governor seems to have outdone the other branches (of state government) by making the cuts higher than the legislature ($338 million vs. $328 million), by vetoing the overlay which could have provided up to $105 million in relief from the cuts, by then vetoing other important items which would have provided important mandate relief or allowed new municipal revenues (such as allowing municipalities to use their own actuarial studies for pension appropriations as opposed to PERA's, the state pension agency, such as allowing the repair plate reform to go forward to garner some $10 million for cities and towns, such as uncapping what cities and towns could charge for liquor licenses) and then adding insult to injury by saying that all will be well with cities and towns because they now have the ability to win back their lost local aid by passing an override on Sept. 24."

The MMA went on to complain about many of the governor's vetoes and the secretive process of handling budget votes.

"Both the House and Senate relied on quickly gaveled voice votes to deal with local aid and a host of other issues," the MMA report says.

We believe the time for reform has come. We want some accountability on the part of our legislators. We want to know who else to blame besides Weld for the financial crunch.

Ted Carroll praised for outstanding efforts

To the Editor:

Having just completed 'Counselor Appreciation Week' at the Cohasset Recreation Day Camp, I would like to voice my appreciation for the outstanding effort the camp's director, Ted Carroll is putting forth once again this summer.

For the past three summers, I have observed Ted carry out his many thankless tasks on a daily basis. Whether it be routinely arriving 20 minutes early for work to receive children being dropped off early or providing doughnuts and juice for the weary camper on the morning after our sleepover, Ted consistently goes the extra mile for the counselors, campers, and parents. Cohasset's children are in very capable hands.

I sincerely hope Ted's efforts are appreciated by all those who come in contact with him.

Yours truly,
David Shumaker

Basketball court resurfacing was fine work

Harold W. Litchfield, Supt.
Cohasset Highway Department
Cohasset, MA 02025
Dear Harold,

On behalf of the recreation commission, I would like to extend our most sincere gratitude to you for resurfacing the Osgood Basketball Court.

As you may be aware, numerous children and youth utilize this facility on a regular basis. It is with a sense of certainty, that I feel I am able to relate their gratitude to you as well.

Through private funding, donations and a small amount of budget revenue, the recreation commission is in the process of upgrading a number of outdoor, recreation facilities.

The efforts of your department have been vital to realization of these goals and we would like to pass our thanks on to your men, as well.

For your efforts and interests in these projects, that are well beyond the scope of your usual functions, we thank you.

Very truly yours,
John M. Worley,
Director
Recreation Commission

Local volunteer drivers honored

South Shore residents have been honored, one posthumously, for outstanding service as volunteer drivers for cancer patients needing daily treatments at Boston and area hospitals.

At a reception held at Brandon Woods, Hingham, the volunteers were cited by Carolyn Housman, Hingham, chair of the Service Committee of the South Shore Unit of the American Cancer Society, for driving 20 or more times during the year ended in June. Altogether the Service Committee has enlisted 84 volunteers, including those who staff the telephone "help lines" in Hingham and Milton, and those in the Reach to Recovery program of visits to mastectomy patients.

"We are proud of the service by these volunteers and would welcome anyone who wishes to perform a needed and rewarding service," Housman said.

The South Shore Unit provides referral, information and educational services, as well as transportation, in the communities of Braintree, Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Milton, Norwell, Quincy, Scituate and Weymouth.

The late Ray Remick of Cohasset, who had been a regular driver as well as a recruiter of other drivers, was named the outstanding volunteer for the year and the Barbara MacDonald Award for this distinction was accepted by his widow, Dorothy Remick.

The citations went to Rosemary Sullivan, Fay Wright and Liba Studley of Hingham and Sara Anderson, John C. Campbell, Susan McVeigh, and Douglas Peck of Cohasset.

SAFE urges residents to attend August 13 meeting

SAFE today urged Cohasset residents to attend the board of health meeting at 8:30 p.m., Tuesday, Aug. 13, at town hall.

"We will ask the board of health to reopen the site assignment hearings on Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL)," said Alix White, President of SAFE.

"SAFE urges Cohasset residents who are interested in protecting our water supply to attend this meeting," said White. SAFE members have expressed a concern that the operation of CHL will potentially pollute Lily Pond, the town's water supply.

"We are concerned, also, that CHL has not provided enough financial security to protect the town from the future costs of leachate collection and disposal from the landfill for the next 20-30 years," said John K. McNabb, Jr., SAFE Vice-President.

"It is imperative for the board of health to reopen the site assignment hearings," said McNabb, "so they can require CHL to cover the costs of cleaning up the mess they will leave when they go out of business."

"The future financial stability of the town of Cohasset depends on the successful resolution of this crisis over CHL future financial assurance," said McNabb. "After CHL goes out of business, the landfill will continue to produce toxic leachate for at least 15 to 20 years. It will cost about $750,000 each year to remove and dispose of this leachate so that it will not pollute Lily Pond."

"CHL has only provided for $750,000, or one year, of this leachate disposal," said McNabb. "Unless the board of health require CHL to increase these funds, then the taxpayers of the town of Cohasset will have to pick up the tab."

The 'Housesitter' film crew wants Cohasset Common to look picture perfect for their location shoot which happens later in August. They might even bring their own ducks to guarantee a picturesque setting.

Make Rosehip jam after the first frost

By Tanna Kasperowicz
Mariner Cable Critic

I'm going to miss Advisory Chair Arne Gjesteby because every time he went before the Selectpersons he made them shriek. "July 29" was a classic film.

So what if "Housesitters" (the comedy film) is being made in Tinytown. The real comedy is always happening on the second floor of town hall.

If you're not a fan of the Selectpersons' show, you are truly missing some of the best live television anywhere. Name your favorite televised series and I can tell you the Selectpeople are funnier, cornier, meaner, and when Selectperson Rocco Laugelle is in a snit, the language (circa '30s and '40s) can get pretty colorful.

Selectperson Diana Kornet has started calling Rocco "Rock" for some reason; I am not aware that anyone else in Tinytown calls him "Rock;" perhaps this is his new film name. In any case, in "July 29" "Rock" called Gjesteby "not a man" meaning, we suppose, a woman — a thought so awful Rock couldn't bring himself to say it. Although it's a little disappointing that a woman is the worst thing Laugelle could think of. Now, here's a little lesson for Rock and all men. The Old Testament says: "Male and female created He them;" Adam means man (homo) made of earth and Eve means "the living." In other words, the Old Testament considers both men and women "men."

Tinytown counsel was never as wonderful as he was in "July 29." Perry Mason style, counsel pointed his finger at Gjesteby (he makes them all scream) and said "Did I ever tell you that you couldn't be on the Troika?" (That kind of question is called begging the answer). Of course counsel had never told Mr. Gjesteby anything. But the hip television audience noticed what counsel didn't do. He didn't turn to the executive secretary and accuse him of lying. As far as we are aware, he never asked the Patriot Ledger or the Mariner for any corrections of articles quoting him through Moderator William Weeks and/or the Executive Secretary Greg Doyan. So now what happens, Weeks and Doyan just hang in the wind?

In any case, Moderator Weeks told the Advisors to reform without Gjesteby. Can you believe no one had the courtesy to tell Gjesteby of their decision? That's how the Tinytown gang operates...cheap and fast, call them last. This group has a desperate need to solve one-dimensional problems.

TT Selectpersons pray that once Gjesteby is retired from the advisory board they will be better able to control the advisors who are becoming a big mouth group and who are now multiplying (gasp!) into dangerous citizen subgroups. Advisors are considering their own film series in the fall.

"July 29" had one of the most exciting endings of all the Selectpersons' films, although a few others have ended similarly (i.e. when Selectpersons Ned Tebbets and Jane Goedecke went into executive session to choose a special counsel to defend Tinytown at the state appellate tax court).

Well, that ending made a lot of people angry, and the "July 29" ending should too, 'cause it was just as blatant and in the end we all pay for stupid mistakes like this. A few weeks ago, the Selectpersons having made many mistakes in a row and probably feeling a little embarrassed, made numerous individual "statements" about how it was OK to make mistakes, and everybody makes mistakes and you wouldn't be human if you didn't make mistakes. It isn't that we mind Selectpersons making mistakes. It's that we get tired of Selectpersons making the same ones over and over again for 13 years.

Now, I do see Selectperson Goedecke making some real progress. She quickly abstained from voting on a small issue in which a member of her family was involved.

Unfortunately, Selectperson Goedecke's fellow selectperson hasn't done as well.

In the film "July 29" Executive Secretary Doyan announced that Selectpersons would be going into executive session to discuss "high level" and "sensitive" negotiations with seven unions over health insurance and guess who smartly votes to go into executive session and who enters executive session to vote on his brothers' and sons' and possibly one or two sisters' health insurance contracts? That's right, Selectperson Laugelle. In his 13th year of office, he is still not able and/or he will not refrain from voting on his blood. When Laugelle sits in on an executive session which involves the Laugelle clan, it threatens negotiations throughout Tinytown. Sorry, counsel. There's no "Do-Over" on that executive session. The proper thing to do is to release the minutes from that session. At the very least the public deserves an observer's place at these closed meetings, where a member of the Selectpersons is allowed to negotiate health insurance for his family, with the apparent blessings of counsel. Help us Rhonda, oh help us Rhonda.

It's all pretty boring. One can miss this series for weeks and years and easily pick it up again.

Few things change in Tinytown.

Selectpersons still giggle when they go into executive session. Laugelle's still not sure when he's in conflict. The "self congratulatory club" asks counsel to research outrageous things at TT's expense: i.e., how many ice cream vendors can fit on Sandy Beach; how can we throw Gjesteby off the Troika; good stuff, germane stuff, stuff vital to Tinytown. Show them you care, send them a balloon.

Tinytown took a barber chair to court last week. Selectpersons (three of them) are rushing to give the Bates building away as they contemplate an override this fall, a biggy $1 million plus override next spring, and continue to cut departmental budgets.

Selectpersons see themselves as a firewall — able to stop things but very rarely able to cause them. TT Selectpersons Nebbetts, Goedecke and Kornet have yet to understand that government lives off income generated by incomes. With that income drying up, government shrinking is in order and tax relief has to happen. Massachusetts job losses continue to break records. The average taxpayer pays 40 cents of every dollar to taxes, not including sales tax and real estate tax, and numerous other fees. In fact, most taxpayers feel they pay very high taxes.

The Selectpersons are out of control. Because we're all in this truck together, it might be wise for someone responsible to grab the wheel. Looks like TT Advisors have.

Leo's Tigers even the record at 3 wins

Submitted by John Kinchla

Milton scored first in this contest, then the Tigers pounced. Seven goals and 57 minutes later, Leo's Tigers skated off with victory firmly in their claws.

This was not a typical game for the fun-loving Tigers. The team has been practicing this summer and now the rookies are becoming veterans. Several of the players are attending hockey camp and many more have been practicing on their own and among themselves. Wednesday nights the team either skates at the Pilgrim rink or runs at Milliken Field. Their determination to succeed was obvious from the opening faceoff of this game. They were on a mission to even their record at 3 wins and 3 defeats, and they did as they are now .500 with 24 goals scored against 21 goals given up.

The Tigers played tenaciously and unselfishly. Mike Reynolds, Charlie Endris and John Murphy started as the first line with Kevin Mulcahy and Tim Conroy on defense. Reynolds then doubleshifted on a line with Chris McKenna and Mike Riley, while Endris skated with Matt Graves and Anthony Wigmore and Murphy skated between Brendan Kinchla and Mike Shields. Mulcahy and Conroy were relieved by Charlie Shields and John Kinchla. Reynolds, Endris and Murphy then came together to skate as a unit before filtering back into the lineup again. This gave Cohasset the equivalent of four rested lines. This strategy worked favorably because the younger players working from their wing positions had on ice guidance and a stronger and more capable man to pass the puck. Reynolds, Endris and Murphy working as center icemen assisted the defense with their relentless backchecking as Cohasset eventually wore Milton down.

This Tiger win demonstrated how far the team has come since ending the high school ice hockey season. The Tigers needed an enormous win against Milton to bounce back from a humiliating loss to Blue Hills the week before. This week Leo's Tigers came prepared to win. Varsity goalie Jeff Stone took his place in net and played with courage. Three Tigers missing from last week's 6 to 2 loss against Blue Hills returned to power this week's win. Veteran center, Mike Reynolds' shot was working, as he scored two goals and rookie wing, Chris McKenna scored twice from the left side. Tim Conroy blasted in a shot. Kevin Mulcahy blasted in another and 9th grader Anthony Wigmore deftly lifted a wrist shot over the Milton goalie for his second score of the season.

The Tigers play Stoughton Friday, August 2 at 7:20 p.m. They then play Division 2 State Champ Archbishop Williams Friday, August 9 at 8:30 p.m. On August 16, they play Hull at 8:30 p.m. and August 30 they play Hingham at 7:20 p.m.

The team has three practices in August, the dates are August 14, 21, and 28 at 7:20 p.m. at Milliken Field. There is a parents meeting for the varsity team parents and the junior high team parents Thursday, August 15 at 8 p.m. at the Deer Hill School Cafeteria. Varsity Hockey Coach Dennis Walsh will be in attendance.

YPST hits the boards

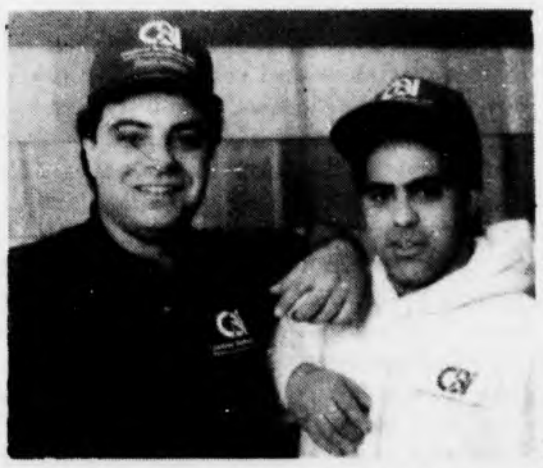
The curtain will rise this weekend on the Young People's Summer Theatre 15th anniversary productions with youths from all over the South Shore between the ages of 12 and 22.

In the annual tradition of producing a big, brassy Broadway musical, the group will present the 1966 Tony-Award winning "The Apple Tree" on August 8, 9, and 10 at 8 p.m. in Scituate High School.

"The Apple Tree" tickets are $7 in advance (all times for Senior Citizens) and $9 at the door. Tickets can be reserved by calling 837-4027 or can be purchased at the door.

Flying Scot results

The Captain's Cup was the first of two races last Saturday, and the trophy went to co-skippers Gordon Hislop and Jim and Barbara Lyons. Hislop/Lyons picked up favorable wind on the leeward side of the last leg and were able to finish just ahead of Steve Bartow and crew Bill Lean. George Wey and crew Matthew Wey came in third.



The second race was a similar triangle windward-leeward course (the fleet will be publishing a sailing terminology book soon — possibly entitled "Jibe Talk"?) George Wey and son took first place, followed by Ray Kasperowicz and crew Bob Davenport in second and Bartow and Lean in third.

Benefit tennis tourney succeeds despite weather

By Peter Kasperowicz
Mariner correspondent

The second annual Benefit Tennis Tournament was a success last weekend despite less than perfect weather. The tournament, which had 64 team entries, raised about $6,500 for the Children's Hospital of Boston.

"We're not tied to the Children's Hospital in any way, but they're a great draw for us," said chief organizer Rob Whelan. "This tournament is big enough that pros from all over want to play in it. It's a real nice honor to win here."

Saturday's games were played in Cohasset on 16 private courts that residents donated for the weekend. "People are usually pretty good about lending courts," Whelan explained while delivering refreshments door to door, or match to match.

For an $85 entry fee, participants also received a can of tennis balls, a tennis bag and a T-shirt. Whelan said that more money was raised this year in donations.

"We had a lot of overhead last year and could only raise $3,000. T-shirts were the big expense, but they were donated this year by Mark Weiner of Financial Innovations," Whelan said. Many Cohasset families donated money or made food for the event as well.

The finals, originally to be held at Peter and Susan Roys' court, were played at the Mill Pond Tennis Club in Hanover due to the weather. All teams eliminated in the first round played in the consolation tournament, which was wrapped up with the winners tournament.

Rich Reddick and Linda O'Laughlin defeated Ed Benz and Annie Abbruzzese in the consolation tournament 7-5, 7-5. "The tournament was extremely well run," O'Laughlin said, who confessed that she and Rich hit each other in the back a few times while serving.

The winners' tournament final was a tough match up consisting of Tony Alessi and Jody Craybas of Weymouth, and Chum and Debbie Steele of Cohasset. The locals put up a good fight but fell in two sets 6-4, 6-4.

"I finally convinced you to play," Whelan said to the Steeles at the awards ceremony. "And when that happened everyone came out of the woodwork to play, mostly because they wanted a piece of you."

Hanson named to national All-American lacrosse team

Tucker Hanson, of Cohasset and formerly of Wayland, who broke all scoring records on the championship Belmont Hill School lacrosse team last season, has been named to the national high school All-American team as a representative of the Independent School League.

Hanson, an attackman who will attend Dennison College in Ohio in the fall, scored a total of 84 points — 49 goals and 35 assists — in leading the Belmont Hill team to an undefeated 14-0-0 season and the school's first I.S.L. lacrosse championship.

For his outstanding season, he was also named all-ISL and all New England Prep. He was also chosen to play on both the East-West and North-South all-star games.

His coach, Beach Tredennick describes Hanson as an "aggressive player who demonstrates excellent stick work and fields very well."

Hanson, in turn, credits Tredennick with the top-notch coaching that helped him play so well and earn his post-season honors.

"Coach Tredennick is a great guy, who always believed in my ability. He encouraged me at all times, and also taught me both the rudiments and fine points of the game," he says.

Hanson first began playing lacrosse four years ago with his older brother Tom, who also lettered in lacrosse at Belmont Hill and is now a senior at Hobart College, who now plays hockey.

Tucker Hanson played varsity lacrosse for the past two years at Belmont Hill. After many years in Wayland, the Hanson family recently moved to Cohasset.

Barbershop tones ring out

Barbershop music is coming to Cohasset Thursday evening, Aug. 8 when the South Shore Men of Harmony, Division IVs championship Barbership chorus, will hold an open rehearsal at the Cohasset Community Center, 3 North Main St. at 8 p.m.

This rehearsal is open to any male singers, young or old, who enjoy close harmony singing. It isn't necessary to have a trained voice or even to be able to read music as our unique way of learning to sing together is as follows: the four parts (tenor, lead, baritone and bass) are taught separately and with the aid of recorded tapes.

The Men of Harmony is composed of male singers living in 28 different towns from Boston to Martha's Vineyard and Cape Cod. They rehearse every Thursday at the Hingham Community Center, 77 South Street, Hingham at 7:30 p.m. Men are always welcome to sit in and "bend a few chords" and have a most pleasant evening.

The chorus meets each Thursday at 7:30 p.m. at the Hingham Community Center, 70 South Street. Any man who enjoys singing may sit in and bend a few chords. Most members do not read music. For information on the chorus contact either Al Lundgren at 335-5713 or Joe DeCastro at 837-2463. The chorus is available to sing for your event. All you have to do is ask.

Lothrop House celebrates 170 years

The Cohasset Historical Society will present a weekend of special events on Friday, Aug. 23, Saturday the 24th and Sunday the 25th, marking the 170th anniversary of its Federal style headquarters house, the Caleb Lothrop House, 14 Summer Street, Cohasset.

Saturday afternoon there will be two trips by bus, starting at the Lothrop House, to visit some of Cohasset's most significant historical areas. Each trip will be accompanied by commentary by Historical Society guides. The first tour goes to Jerusalem Road to traverse the town's 19th century "Summer Colony," and to view the great estates of the Cohasset shore as they appear from the ancient highway that borders the ocean. The return trip will travel along Atlantic Avenue, also very much a part of the 19th century summer colony scene. Included will be the story of "Brass Button Avenue" or "actor's row" along the shore of Cohasset Harbor. This tour will depart the Lothrop House at 1 p.m. Saturday the 24th.

At 3 p.m. a second guided bus tour will go to the ancient highway of King Street, a road dating from the 1670 Land Division of Conahasset. Early homes line the street, the site of a 19th century cider mill can be seen, and an early District Schoolhouse now a private home.

From there the tour will travel to Beechwood to see the site of one of the earliest industries in Cohasset; the Turtle Island ironworks of Mordecai Lincoln (Mordecai was a direct ancestor of Pres. Abraham Lincoln). The early iron smelter turned out iron for tools and equipment used locally. To produce the iron, "bog ore" was brought to the water-powered mill for refining. Mordecai Lincoln's millsite can be viewed from nearby Mill Lane. Aspects of the history of the millsite and adjacent areas will be presented.

Other events of the special Historical Society gala weekend celebration will be: on Friday at 4:30 p.m. a wine and cheese reception at the Caleb Lothrop House with special exhibit of Cohasset-related artworks of the 19th century; on Saturday, following the two historical tours at 6 p.m., also at Lothrop House, an old-fashioned clambake put on by Dan Anderson Clambakes of Cohasset. The final event of the weekend will be a gala pancake breakfast at Lothrop House starting at 7:30 a.m. Sunday, Aug. 25.

Tickets will soon be available through the Society, for all or each of the events.

recreation notes

Band concert

The recreation commission will sponsor a concert on Cohasset Common Tuesday, August 13, at 7:30 p.m.

Performing will be the South Shore Concert Band, consisting of 30 musicians, under the direction of Richard P. Whitmarsh.

The concert is free through the generosity of the South Shore Playhouse Associates, Inc. and a matching grant from the American Federation of Musicians, in New York City. Three concerts happen this summer.

The public is invited to attend and it is suggested that you bring your own lawn chair or blanket. Also, from time to time, insect repellent is a good item to have available.

Pro-Play

The recreation commission is accepting registration for Pro-Play, a program for children four to seven. Pro-Play is designed to teach and reinforce movement and motor skills to young children and will meet daily, 1 1/2 hours a day, Monday to Friday, August 26 to 30 at the Osgood School Field.

Children will be grouped into classes for ages four and five, 8:30 to 10 a.m. and ages six and seven, 10:30 a.m. to noon. Pro-Play will be co-directed by Cliff Olsson and John Tate of Great Britain, who are teachers and coaches both in Great Britain and the U.S.A. Pro-Play has been developed to expose children to a variety of physical and social skills including balance, timing, coordination, health and fitness and imagination.

To register, call the recreation department office at 383-6791. Non-residents will be accepted for this program on a space available basis.

Dog obedience lasses

The recreation department will accept registrations for beginner and intermediate dog training classes taught by Laurie Cleveland. Classes will be held Tuesdays on the Town Common, Cohasset, starting Tuesday, August 13.

Beginner classes will be from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m., and the Intermediate/Advanced class will be from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m.

The fee for the eight week program will be $40. Checks made payable to the Town of Cohasset, may be brought to the first class. Participating dogs should be a minimum of three months. The purpose of the Beginner classes will be to teach novice pet owners basic obedience and responsible pet ownership. Subjects covered are proper use of voice corrections, stay commands, getting the dog to come, heel, etc. Helpful hints on ownership and responsibility will be included. The Intermediate/Advanced class is designed for dogs that have completed the Beginner class. For classes, owners are required to have their dogs equipped with a humane choke chain. The proper size of the chain is determined by measuring the dog's neck and adding four inches. Absolutely no spike collars allowed. It is also strongly suggested that the handlers wear comfortable shoes and clothes for this session. For all classes, the fee is $40 per dog for the program. To register, call the recreation department at 383-6791. Classes are limited in size, non-residents will be accepted on a space available basis.

Scouting news update

By Taffy Nothnagle
Special to the Mariner

The Boy Scouts of Troop 28 Cohasset, had a busy, productive, and fun filled spring.

Some of the activities the boys enjoyed were participating in the Scout Swim Meet at Massasoit College with eight other troops and attending the Town Meeting with the opening flag ceremony led by Frank Abadie, Bill St. Croix, Jay Nothnagle, Josh and Dan Preston, and Chad and Mark Whitman.

A Scout-Parent campout in April at Wheelwright Park was a real experience for boys, fathers and several mothers, too! Another weekend found our first/second class scouts hiking and camping out on the trail on Mt. Hight, Jackson, N.H. In spite of poor weather conditions, the boys came back richer in experience and endurance.

Following the march in the Memorial Day Parade, our scouts and their families were invited to the Scoutmaster's home for a barbecue and afternoon on the beach. Once again the troop attended the Old Colony Council Camporee at Stonehill College in Easton in June, where they won an award for the replica of Minot's Light they had built by lashing small trees into a 15-ft. high lighthouse look alike. This was also on display during the Harborfest.

It's summertime now and our scouts continue to be active enjoying themselves, learning new skills, working together, building, cooperating, and planning for the future. Mid July, Troop 28 traveled to Camp Squanto, in the Myles Standish State Forest in Plymouth, for their annual weeklong summertime camping adventure. Prior to the trip, Howie Motenko, Scoutmaster, met with each scout to discuss activities and to let each scout decide what merit badges he wished to work on at camp.

Troop 28 meets every Monday 7:30 to 9 p.m. at the Osgood School. Any boy entering grade 6 or older is welcome to attend one of the meetings. If you're bored and have nothing to do, come join Troop 28 and you'll never be bored again!

If you have questions, call Howie Motenko, Scoutmaster, at 383-2535 or Jeff Nothnagle, 383-0895.

Lighthouse replica topped off

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

A crowd gathered on Government Island Saturday morning, despite the showers, to watch one more piece of cooperation add substance to the replica project.

As everyone knows, the Historical Commission is overseeing the development a copy of the top section of Minot's Light on the approximate site where the lighthouse was first carved out of granite about 130 years ago.

The replica is 31 feet tall. The actual lighthouse measures 114 feet in height.

Work on the replica has been progressing as quickly as donations of time, materials and money allow.

But the difference in appearance over the past two weeks has been strong.

Saturday a shiny copper ball was put in place at the top of the structure. A crane, opearated by Paul Laugelle and owned by Steve Ward was on hand to whisk the heavy piece of the handiwork of Herb and Ken Jason to the top.

Fire Chief Daniel Brock personally assisted the project, bringing the ladder truck to Government Island and extending the long ladder to allow the last piece to be walked into place.

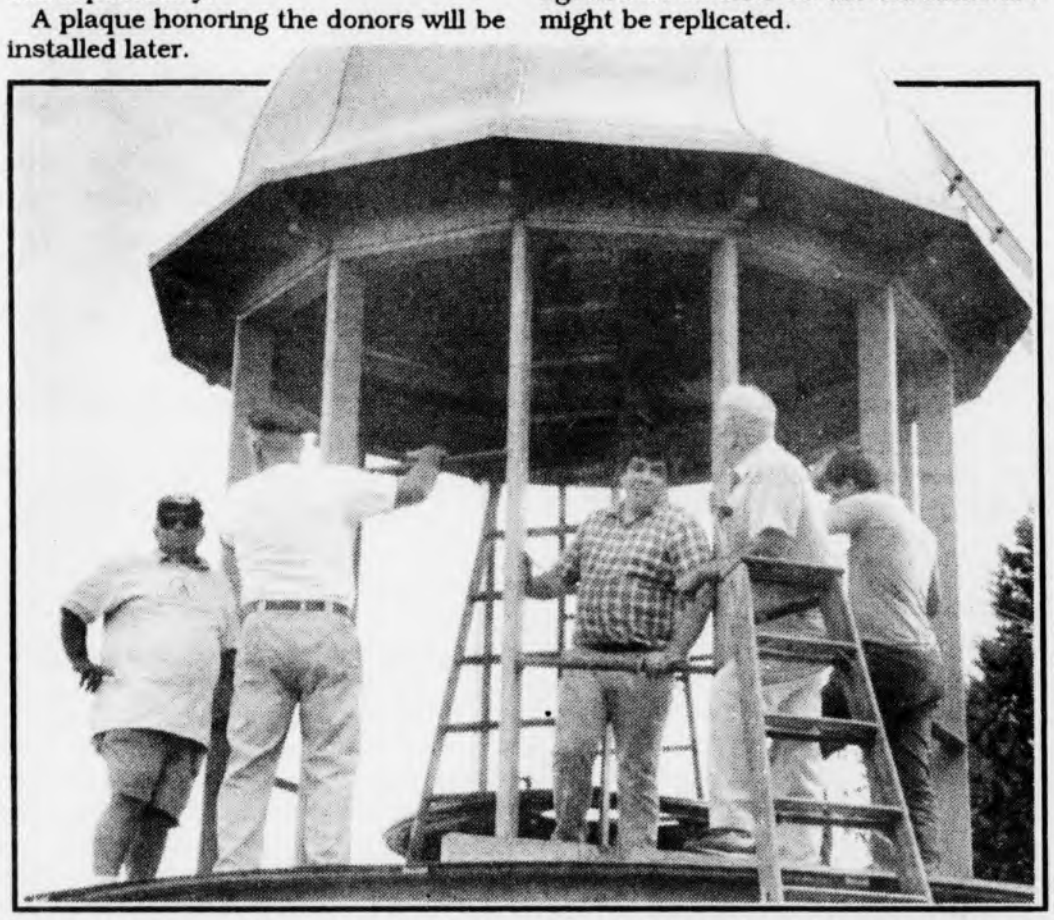
Mark Koopman of Scituate, presidents of New England Steel Tank, a Quincy-based company, walked the top point up the ladder to the waiting arms of a vokunteer, Kevin Stewart.

Cameras were snapping and video cameras whirling to record history in the making.

Now that the monument has been topped off, the workers will be taking a break.

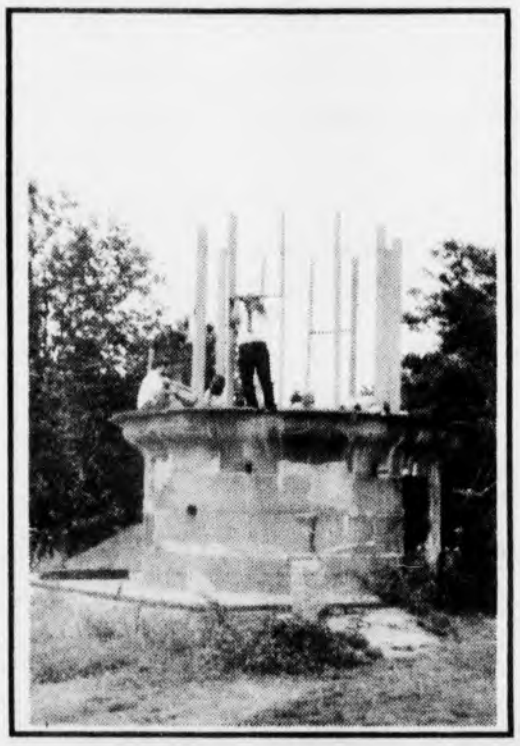
Noel Ripley of the Historical Commission said he expects the project will be finished next summer — provided the money shows up.

He did a brisk business selling Minot's Light T-shirts Saturday. Indeed, most everyone present was wearing a lighthouse T-shirt of one sort or another.



About 20 of the 36 windows planned to be located in the middle section have been sold. The glass will be three inches thick and then plexiglass will seal the outside with another three inch piece.

A donation for the heavy metal door is still a possbility.



A plaque honoring the donors will be installed later.

The idea of having donors listed for the gift of windows came from Nancy Snowdale in the collector's office, according to Ripley, who is still working at raising funds for exterior trim.

Meanwhile the lighthouse volunteers are looking for old pictures of the lighthouse interior so the old furniture might be replicated.

Top left shows work underway on the steel frame of the second stage. Next to that Herb Jason and Mark Koopman work on attaching the copper ball to the crane. Center left is Fire Chief Daniel Brock who got the ladder in place for the final work on the top of the beacon. At center right is Mark Koopman heading toward the tiptop on the fire truck ladder. Kevin Stewart awaits at the top. At bottom work on the replica continues.

The small brick building next to the Sailing Club on Government Island once stored whale oil and later kerosene to fuel Minot's Light. There's talk of doing some work to put the building back in its original shape.

Going for the bizarre with YPST's 'The Bald Soprano'

ends of the stage and converse as if they were total strangers only to realize that they know each other.

The Smiths have a French maid named Mary, simultaneously played by June E. Desmond and Nicole Principe. Desmond and Principe delivered an outstanding performance acting in perfect unison. Throughout the play, the maid foils the intellectual snobbery of her master and mistress by contributing to the overall nonsense.

The last character to appear on stage is the fire chief, portrayed with great humor and humility by David Almeida. During a particularly comical scene, the fire chief laments the fact that there aren't enough fires in London. His despair leads him to ask the Smiths whether or not they have any fires which need to be put out. At this point, the fire chief reminded me of the repair man in the Maytag commercial who is never called upon to fix anything. The plot takes another humorous twist when the audience discovers that the fire chief is courting the maid. The Smiths are greatly disturbed when this relationship is exposed because the maid and the fire chief do not belong to the same social class.

When Mrs. Smith asks the fire chief to tell a story, he reluctantly grants her request with a series of very short, very absurd tales. The other characters are somewhat amused and soon they are all telling stories such as "The Bald Soprano" (she always set her hair in the same style). The whole scene seems quite ridiculous. However, it proved to be enjoyable for anyone who realized that Ionesco intended it to be ridiculous.

Once the story-telling session is over, the two couples resume their conversation. Gradually, the strain of being polite becomes too great for them. The conversation breaks down as they all begin to exchange random thoughts. As the characters struggle to get their point across, they become increasingly agitated and are reduced to shouting single words and letters until finally, there is silence.

All in all, "The Bald Soprano" was a rather intriguing production. Carolyn Curtis, Peter Law, and Michele Pecoraro should be commended for their fine direction of this complex play.

If you would like to experience the Young People's Summer Theater, be sure to attend "The Apple Tree" which will be running August 8 to 10 at Scituate High School.

Merideth Finn, as Mrs. Martin

In YPST's production of the 'Bald Soprano' are from left Doug Moe, as Mr. Smith, Carolyn Hunt, as Mrs. Smith, the maid, played by both Nicole Principe and June Desmond.

Murray wins post with Women in the Military group

For nearly two decades the more than 700,000 veterans of Massachusetts have known of the work of fellow veteran, State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray of Cohasset.

Of special concern to Rep. Murray is the special needs of the more than 30,000 fellow women veterans of Massachusetts. A veteran of the United States Marine Corps, Representative Murray is a member of both The American Legion, The American Legion Auxiliary and the Veterans of Foreign Wars Auxiliary. Rep. Murray is a recipient of the Disabled American Veterans coveted Certificate of Merit.

As a Legionnaire, Rep. Murray has given strong support to the women veteran members of the Governor's Women Veterans Advisory Committee, working closely with the committee's chairman, Dorothy Dickson of Norwell. As well as serving as chairman of the committee, Dickson is a Past State Commander of the American Legion and serves the Town of Norwell as veterans agent.

Of special interest to Murray is the proposed Women in Military monument and museum which will be erected at the entrance to Arlington National Veterans Cemetery in Washington, D.C.

In Recognition of Rep. Murray's record of service to veterans and women veterans in particular, Gov. William F. Weld has recently appointed Rep. Murray as Massachusetts Chairman of the Women in Military Monument and Museum Committee.

Veterans concerns have been a tradition for the Murray family. Rep. Murray's late father, Nathaniel M. Hurwitz, a veteran of World War I was Commissioner of Veterans Services under then Governor and former United State Secretary of State Christian A. Herter.

Rep. Murray has been meeting with the leadership of women veteran organizations in the Commonwealth, which includes women veterans of World War II, The Korean War, Vietnam War and women veterans of the Persian Gulf.

"Women have from colonial days been involved in military affairs. Cohasset and Massachusetts women fought in the Indian, Revolution, Civil and World Wars, on through Korea and Vietnam, onto Grenada and Panama and more than 65,000 served in Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and the Persian Gulf. Operation Desert Storm will add an exciting new element to the Women in the Military Museum and I look forward to working with all my fellow veterans, especially those women who have served this nation and Commonwealth with such distinction," she said.

Weld announces plans to cut highway funding by $205,066

The Weld administration is planning to cut $205,066 of Cohasset's Chapter 90 road and highway funding from the 1991 Transportation Bond Bill, according to the Massachusetts Municipal Association (MMA).

According to the MMA, the administration plans to use "all available revenues from the bill for payments on past and future state highway and transportation projects.

According to the MMA publication The Beacon, legislators included $90 million over the next two years for local road, highway, and bridge construction projects when they passed the bill in May. The administration is now saying that it will impose a cap on capital expenditures for the upcoming fiscal year that would divert all transportation bond money to state projects.

The association is urging cities and town's to contact the the Governor's office to protest the proposed cut.

"The legislature passed the transportation Bond Bill with full knowledge that they were finally able to provide some help for their embattled communities," the MMA wrote in its call to battle. "The general public, paying increased gas taxes, has every right to expect that some of these funds will come back to help maintain their local roads and bridges.

"Communities, damaged by the deep cuts in state revenue sharing, are relying on these highway funds to keep some portion of their road programs alive."

One half of the funding would be due this year, the second half would be due in fiscal year 1993, which begins July 1, 1992.

CHL faces more opposition from citizen group

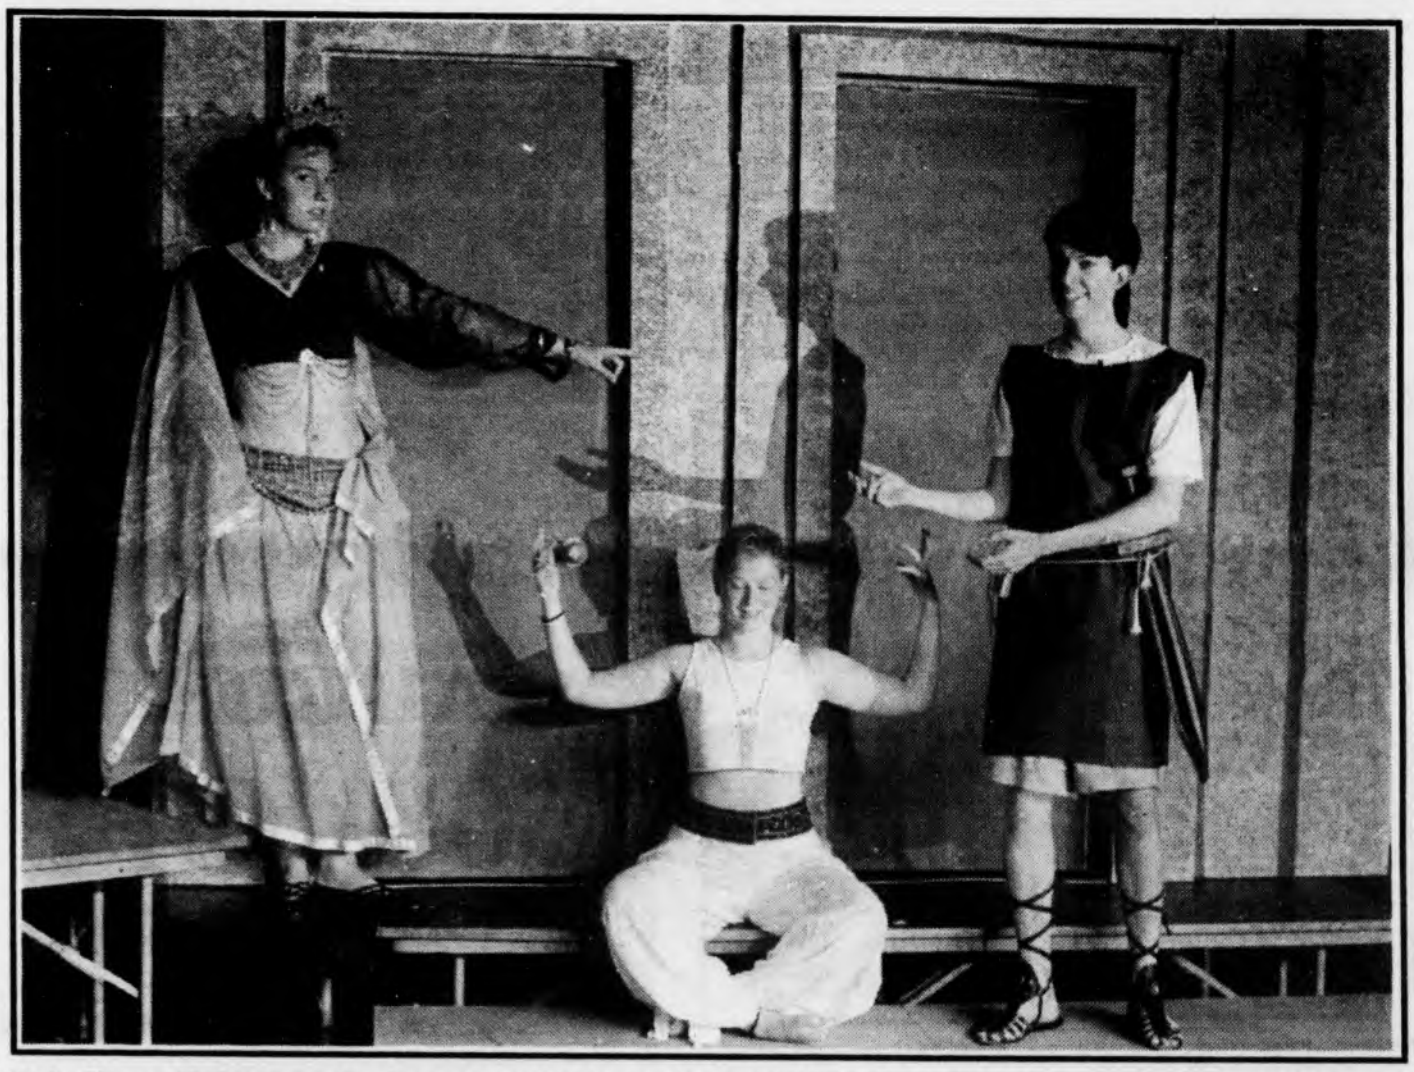
By Tanna Kasperowicz
Special to the Mariner

On Sept. 10, board of health officials will decide whether to reopen the site assignment hearing for Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL).

Tuesday, Aug. 13, on a vote of 2 to 1, with member William Baird against, it was decided that Paul Barry could no longer serve as the part-time spotter at CHL. Members of the board of health and their agent will serve as spotters.

Also, on a motion by Baird, it was voted to send a letter to CHL asking what corrective action CHL has made with regard to preventing leachate tanks from being over-filled. Conservation Commissioner Thomas Callahan said his commission had sent an enforcement order to CHL regarding the same issue, but that no answer had been forthcoming.

These actions followed a 40-minute discussion with the citizens' group, Stop Any Further Expansion, S.A.F.E., who asked that a review be made of the status of CHL compliance with all of the conditions imposed by the board of health on May 1, 1986; with S.A.F.E.'s final goal being to suspend, revoke or modify the site assignment.



Health board member Susan Becker feels the spotter issue is still a strong issue. She doubts that the town will be successful in getting CHL to pay for a spotter.

S.A.F.E. member John K. McNabb Jr. said he felt it was important for the issues raised by S.A.F.E. and the board of health to be addressed through the public hearing process. Paul Barry, owner of Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL), was not present at the meeting; however, Attorney Anton T. Moehrke responded via telecopier, saying he felt most of the concerns being addressed by S.A.F.E. were properly within the jurisdiction of the DEP.

Further, Moehrke said CHL's existing facility permit application is "exclusively a matter of Department of Environmental Protection (DEP)."

Moehrke said the "long-dormant site assignment

Hollywood just 'dye'ing to come to Cohasset

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

Its not easy being green.

Attempts to naturally green Cohasset Common in time for its role in the upcoming film "Housesitter" have not done the trick, so the production company will dye the grass.

According to Selectman Jane Goedecke, the town's liaison with the film, Michael Williams, the film's location scout, told her greenskeepers will spray the common with Greenszit, a cosmetic for grass.

She said the dye is vegetable-based, commonly used and perfectly safe.

"I wonder if I could get some for my lawn," Goedecke joked. "It is a perfectly safe thing to do."

High heat and near drought conditions have browned the common. Film scouts felt it was important for the the grass to be as vibrant as possible for the film.

Even though filming for the romantic comedy starring Steve Martin is scheduled to begin tomorrow (Aug. 16), last minute negotiations with the film company were still going on Monday night.

The town's contract with Housesitter Inc., stipulates that Cohasset will receive at least eight fruitless pear trees, which the movie company will be required to plant. Two weeks ago, Williams said the town could get as many as a dozen of the trees, he said were valued at $1,600 a piece.

According to Goedecke the company is trying to back down from the agreement. She said the film now only plans to use six trees.

To further complicate things, the sidewalk at several shooting locations is too narrow for the trees to be planted; wooden planters will be used to support them during the shoot.

Goedecke said Williams agreed to give the town the six trees used for the shoot and two additional trees to meet the commitment. The problem is with the planting of the trees.

She said Williams told her that because the trees were too wide for the sidewalk, the company did not want to plant them. He said they would use the trees in Cohasset for the three-day August shoot, then bring

Love lies under 'The Apple Tree' with YPST

By Lee Todd Lacks
Mariner correspondent

The Young People's Summer Theater concluded its fifteenth season this past weekend with a fine production of Bock and Harnick's "The Apple Tree," directed by Donald S. Capen and Michele Pecoraro. "The Apple Tree" is a musical consisting of three separate plays which share common themes of love and desire.

The first act is entitled "The Diary of Adam and Eve." This play takes a fresh approach to a well-known story from the Bible. Adam, played by Cohasset's Michael Cisneros, is quite puzzled by this curiously strange creature who calls herself Eve, played by Kate deLima. Eve desires to know all there is to know about the world around her. deLima delivered a wonderful performance as the world's first female. Through their brilliant interaction, deLima and Cisneros enabled the audience to recognize the qualities which differentiate men and women. For instance, Eve wants to decorate Adam's crude shelter with flowers thus exhibiting the female

Leahy accepts the appreciation of friends

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

The Cohasset Chamber of Commerce made Aug. 11 a day to extend its goodwill and friendship to Dan Leahy, one its strongest supporters.

Leahy was one of the founders of the Cohasset Chamber during his tenure as manager of Kimball's By the Sea. He recently left Kimball's for work in Hingham.

But the Cohasset Chamber isn't ready to let him go.

The Chamber got together last Sunday at the home of Jack and Doris Golden to give Leahy a "don't go away" present.

The group decided a lifetime membership would be a suitable gift.

Leahy is now working for National Abatement, a company based in Hingham. He is working for Wayne Sawchuk, a Chamber member who was there Sunday to celebrate Leahy's change of status.

Andy Merrill, a real estate agent with Hallmark 100, gave Leahy her kind words and hopes for a bright future.

She was one of the several dozen people present to

Two join arts council

Selectmen Monday night appointed Paula Kozol of Atlantic Avenue, and Harold Coughlin of Reservoir Road to the arts lottery council.

Selectmen news in brief

Selectmen Monday night approved several requests, including:

• A one-day liquor license for the George Mealy American Legion Post clam bake on Sandy beach Sept. 7. The event will benefit a scholarship fund.

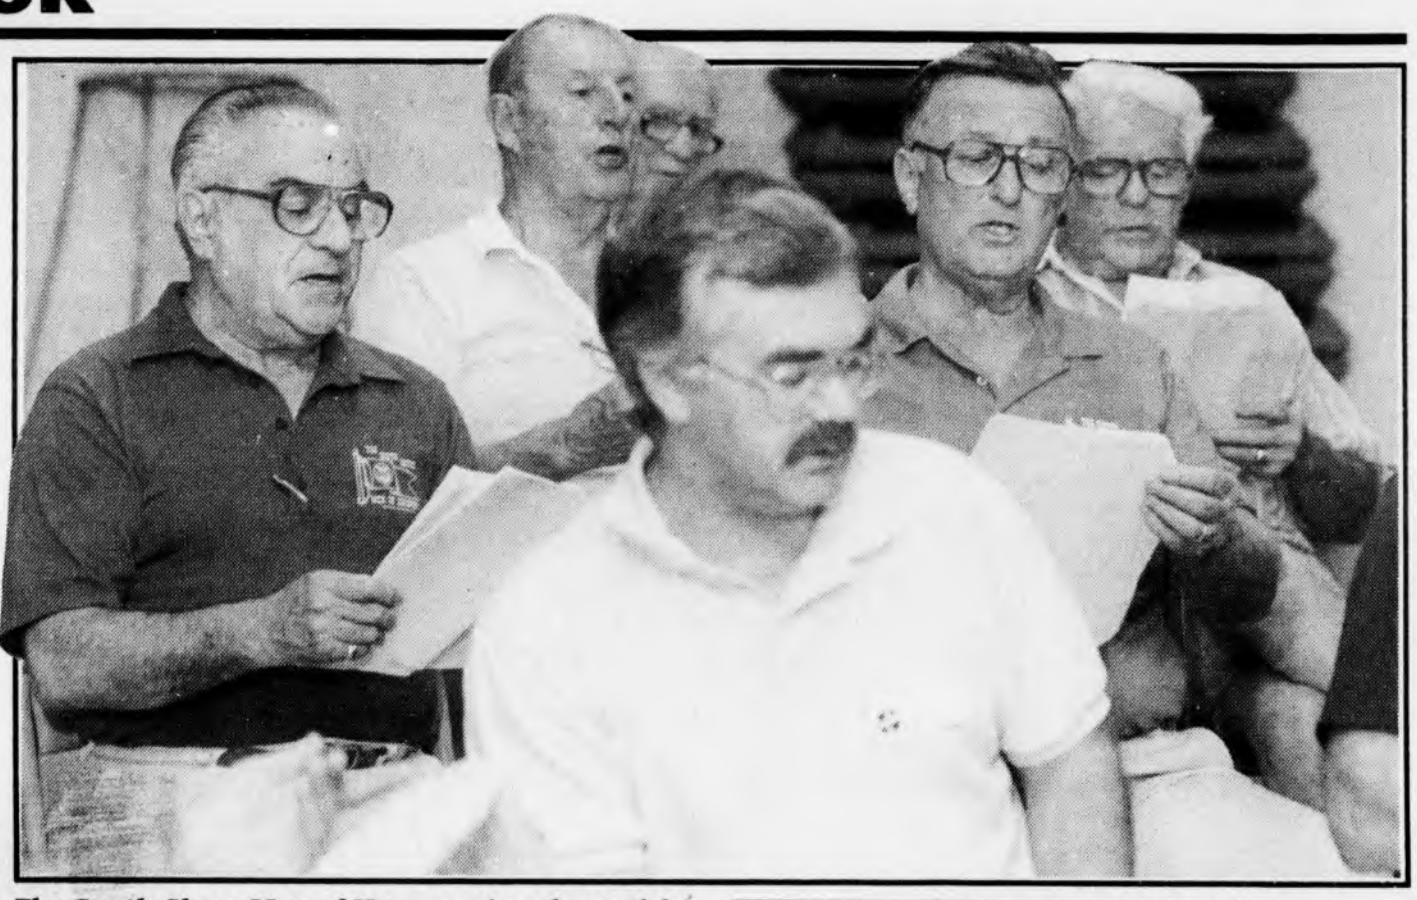
• Use of Sandy Beach as a stop on a National Multiple Sclerosis fund-raising bike tour on Sept. 8.

• Use of town hall on Aug. 15 for a benefit performance of the play "Charlie and the Chocolate Factory" by the Cohasset Swim Center.

Ambulance bills debated

Selectmen will investigate using an outside collection agency for town ambulance billings.

At Monday night's selectmen's meeting, Selectman Martha Gjesteby suggested the board find out if an outside service could improve on the town's in-house operation.



She said that last year only $22,978 was collected from $63, 545 in billings. She said this year $35,041 has been billed, but only $5,355 has been collected.

Gjesteby said an outside agency could greatly improve the percentage collected.

"Rather than complaining about it we should look and see what we can do," she said.

Selectman Jane Goedecke said she would consider an outside agency as long as selectmen would still "have control over how aggressive they would be."

Selectman Diana Kornet said if the service could pay for itself "it would be worth it."

Kimball's manager ok

Selectmen Monday night approved a change of management at Kimball's by-the Sea.

Selectmen voted unanimously to approve the promotion of Jane A. McCombs to manager. She replaces Dan Leahy at the helm of the restaurant and inn.

As licensing authority in the town selectmen are required to approve any management change.

them to Concord for other scenes. When the film crew returned in October they would bring the trees with them and give them to the town in wooden planters.

Town Counsel Richard Henderson said the town's contract explicitly states that the company is responsible for "planting" eight trees along Main Street. He said if the company could not plant the trees for the shoot, they would still have to plant the trees somewhere along Main Street.

Goedecke said the town should stick to the contract and demand the planting as part of the compensation package.

Selectman Diana Kornet agreed that keeping the trees roots confined in a planter would not be good for them. She also objected to the trees being shuttled between Concord and Cohasset

"I don't think they have a snowball's chance of surviving the winter," she said. "If they are going to be compensation for the town they need to be alive."

Goedecke said she would tell Williams the contract must be honored unless a compromise could be reached. The board agreed to accept only six trees if the production company paid the town the $3,200 value of the other two trees. This money could be used for planting and upkeep, selectmen said.

Hedlund co-sponsors re-organization of MWRA

Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, said this week he is joining other legislators in co-sponsoring legislation that would radically change who decides the rates and budget for the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority. This bill, S1090, includes several different reforms aimed at creating public accountability while still allowing the MWRA to be free from political pressures. Rep. Mary Jeannette Murray, R-Cohasset, is another backer of the Bill.

The new directly appointed board, under this bill, must approve the budget recommended by the authority. This constitutes a major shift in who decides the budget of the MWRA, not the Authority anymore, but the rate payers and the voters.

The other significant reform is to declare the MWRA a public utility and have it subject to all the rules, regulations and laws every other utility in the Commonwealth has to abide by. This reform would force the MWRA to fully justify any proposed rate increases. As a public utility, the MWRA would be prevented from increasing its rates by such large percentages like they have done in the past.

The Secretary of Environmental Affairs who was by statute the Chairman of the Advisory Board, would be removed. By doing this, a perceived conflict of interest is eliminated and public accountability is increased. The new board boasts six members, one from Quincy, Winthrop and Walpole and three from the City of Boston, a majority who represent rate payers and the voters, not the Authority.

This bill changes how representatives from Quincy and Winthrop are appointed to the board. These two cities are given positions on the board because they host major MWRA facilities. Previously, the cities recommended a short list and the Governor chose who would represent the cities. The bill would change that to allow for direct appointment.

The bill allows the town of Walpole a new representative on the board because they will now host a MWRA sludge landfill. The Walpole board member would also be directly appointed like the similar city and town board members.

This legislation is aimed at controlling the authority's rates and making it more responsible to the 68 communities in the district.

She's seeking help for Romanian orphans

By Andrew MacLellan
Mariner staff

They are starved, beaten and naked.

When they are fed, a thin gruel is dumped into open mouths, a sputtering, useless tide of stew which spills over parched lips to mingle with the feces and urine in which they are made to sleep for days.

They have never been outside their second story prison and have no concept of time.

They live in a black void of physical and psychological despair where deprivation is the rule and brutality a matter of course.

These are the orphans of Romania, before volunteers like Jennifer deChiara of Marshfield began arriving to soothe the decades-old horror of this abomination born of ignorance and disdain.

So taken was deChiara with Romanian ex-patriot Ion Berindei's horrific film, Shame of a Nation, which first documented the plight of Romania's orphans, that she felt compelled to answer his plea for recruits.

As a volunteer for the Free Romania Foundation, deChiara travelled to the newly liberated Eastern block country this past June for two months of intensive, heart-wrenching labor inside an "Orphanage for the Irrecuperably Handicapped" in the tiny village of Nicoresti.

She arrived in a team of five. Ten more volunteers followed in July and help was solicited from other organizations as the scope of the problem began to unfold.

A special education teacher at Mass. Hospital School in Canton, deChiara was dismayed to see a level of care too degenerate and conditions too unspeakable even for her knowledgeable hand.

"I figured that since I worked in a hospital for the physically disabled it would be a good thing for me to do," she said.

After two months of volunteer work in a Roumanian orphanage, Jennifer deChiara feels compelled to share her story of horror and compassion.

"But I found my specialized training and experience didn't count for a lot because the situation was so different.

"They were not physically disabled in a way I was used to seeing. It's very hard to describe. . ."

Placed in the orphanage for a variety of reasons - some for nothing more than a cleft palate - the children were caged in on the second floor of the hospital outside of town, deChiara said, and slept two or three to a crib in a room with no heat or plumbing.

During the day, their caretakers, or "infirmieres," young women with no training in child care, would order the children to sit crowded along a bench.

If they moved once the entire day, they were beaten.

deChiara described the director of the hospital as a, "slovenly, lazy, ignorant old man, who knew absolutely nothing about medicine.

"In a meeting, he asked us if we knew what cerebral palsy was," she recalled. "His explanation was that it resulted when a pregnant woman is drunk and gives birth to a baby who is drunk and stays drunk for the rest of (his) life. That's why they walk like they do, he said.

"And that was a pediatrics specialist."

Even in the town of 200, conditions were primitive.

"There was no running water," deChiara said, "so we had trouble getting any water up to the orphanage from the town well.

"This made basic hygiene very difficult.

"The only bathroom facility the children had was a room with a "Turkish toilet" which is basically just a hole in the floor."

There were two types of children in the orphanage, deChiara said.

The first she described as "skinny, wiry kids," who were able enough to run or move around.

The second were confined to their cribs, some of them for years.

"Until the first volunteers began arriving in January, there were no diapers," she said. "They would lie in their feces and urine until God knows when, until they were cleaned up and even then there was no water.

"As a result there were skin breakdowns.

"I'm pretty sure all the kids had worms when we first arrived."

Shots, given to some children by the Ministry of Health to increase muscle development, backfired and reduced muscle growth in the hip, deChiara said.

Because these children got no exercise, their legs turned upward.

As the child grew, the deformed spindles of bony leg became wrapped and contorted around the torso, and crippled feet hooked over the shoulder, hanging limply in atrophied defeat.

Although she did background research before travelling to Romania, deChiara was unaware of the epidemic of a fungal growth known as cradle cap.

"They all had cradle cap," she said. "It's a fungus that grows on the scalp. They had helmets of it which extended from their eyebrows to the backs of their necks.

"It had to be scraped off and medicated.

"For the kids it was a painful, bloody experience.

"One of the first volunteers to arrive told me that they didn't mind it because they were used to pain and it meant they got a half-an-hour of attention."

deChiara came to know just how starved the children were for affection when she opened a school in one of the hospital's rooms.

"The first criterion I used for school was to ask them who is your friend, to see what social level they were at.

"Not one of them could answer.

"None of them knew the meaning of the word friend.

"The children were so desperate for school and attention of any kind that they broke the windows and

Renovations should come in under budget

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

The almost-completed $396,000 renovation of the police and fire station will come in at least $4,000 below original estimates.

At Monday night's selectmen's meeting, David Chase, the chairman of the renovation committee, said he originally hoped even more money would be saved.

"I had hoped to have $50,000 left to put into an escrow fund for maintenance, but we just can't," he told the board.

The renovation, approved by town meeting last April, began the week after Thanksgiving 1990.

Chase said there is now $59,161 left in the restoration account. From that balance $7,051 will be paid to Lambrian Construction; $5,802 will be authorized as a payment to Strekolovsky and Hoit Architects.

He said other items, including air conditioners, windows, and insulation will also have to be purchased with money from the account. Approximately $1,500 will be spent on new cabinets and kitchen supplies at the station. Chase said employees at the station will be responsible for their instalation.

"They said they would put in the kitchen cabinets as long as we bought them," he said.

Funds for a new police console and a new phone system for both departments have been set aside but await authorization. He said the new phone system would be compatible with the system used by the school department.

The project, which began last year, added a new roof and gutters. The heating system, flooring, lockers and doors were replaced and the police counter was bullet-proofed.

Chase said he had not determined what the cost of annual maintenance would be, but he promised to give selectmen an estimate soon. He said because a lot of the equipment is brand-new, guarantees and warranties should keep costs low over the next few years.

Chase said costs could be kept down if personnel were responsible for simple maintenance tasks, such as cleaning-up gutters, drying-up oil spots and picking up after themselves. "It is hard to estimate what police and fire personnel can do for themselves," he said. Selectman Rocco Laugelle reminded Chase that the police and fire departments operate under a union contract and even though this work could be suggested, it could not be a requirement.

Chase said he was optimistic the renovations would be well-below budget, but as the project went along several repairs and purchases became necessary. He said original estimates did not include such things as new windows for the police dormitory, because he was "pinching pennies."

Officials slam King Street, Route 3A road repairs

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

Road repairs at the intersection of King Street and Route 3A have come under fire from town officials.

Selectmen and the conservation commission have both contacted the state Department of Public Works over for work they think was overpriced and unpleasing.

Highway Supt. Harold Litchfield said he was disappointed by the low-grade asphalt used by the state. He said the state assured him that the grade was commonly used and safe.

Litchfield also echoed the most common complaint heard of the work, that proper care wasn't taken to prevent wild plant growth.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle said he too was been disappointed with the work and said he wrote to the state outlining his complaints.

"You could read a newspaper through the loam they put down there," he said. He also complained about rampant plant growth that has turned that area into a "hayfield."

Laugelle also blasted the cost of project. He said the repairs have cost the state more than $500,000. He said they could have done much better for the money.

"It is as dangerous now as it was before," he said.

The conservation commission is also concerned about the project. According to Chairman Merle Brown, they too have sent a letter to the state detailing their concerns.

Laugelle said he has not yet heard back from the state, but he said they seem to agree officials have legitimate gripes.

CHL faces more opposition from citizen group

revocation 'hearings' have been rendered moot; site assignment regulations promulgated by the DEP which now require the board of health to appoint a neutral hearing officer and to accord CHL the right to cross-examine all witnesses.

Board chairman Sharon Becker said she felt the spotter issue was still a strong issue with the board of health with regard to several observations made at CHL.

Becker said she doubted the town would be successful in getting CHL to pay for a spotter. She said she and her board were concerned about the costs to the town of reopening the site assignment hearing.

During an on-site inspection, Becker said she observed that the gate keeper made no visual inspection of full loaded and covered trucks. And, she observed a clear violation of hours of operation.

Other issues which board of health members and S.A.F.E. discussed were the use of scales and traffic control; post-closure leachate removal costs; the monitoring program; odor control; and drainage and surface runoff controls to protect wetlands.

Member Michael Sullivan said he wanted to explore the figures and costs to the town if CHL "walked away today; closed CHL and then walked away; and general maintenance figures."

Sullivan said the environmental impact study with regard to Lily Pond had been found to be "inconclusive" by the state.

More Health Board

In other action last Tuesday, the health board voted to allow emergency repairs to a septic system on a property owned by Charles E. Butman Jr., located at 17 Spring Street. A sewer easement and water line easement were granted.

Robert Crawford, P.E., represented owner Paul Barry with regard to his Deck Point property on CJC Highway. The board voted to allow Deck Point to install two fields and trenches only, with the capability of handling over one million gallons of water. Member William Baird said years ago the board had promised Deck Point these fields. Foundations must be connected within a two-year period or the permit expires. While the specifications meet state requirements, distance variances were necessary.

SAFE presents board of health with queries and requests

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

In a 44-page filing to the board of health, the anti-dump lobbyists from SAFE (Stop Any Further Expansion) called the operation of the private landfill at Cohasset Heights the source of:

- noxious odors.
- a potential threat to public drinking water.
- wetlands contamination in Great Swamp and ultimately the Weir River.
- disruption of recreational use of the nearby Thayer and Whitney Woods.

The filing informed the board of health that under new law, it is up to the board of health to set an application fee which might reach up to $42,000 for a site assessment hearing on the subject of the Cohasset Heights Landfill, CHL.

The same filing said that the board would not need a hearing officer if the process were to operate under the old law and cited quotes from Town Counsel Richard Henderson to prove the old law could be used, since the hearing began back in 1986 before the new law was enacted.

The same filing asked the board of health to ask town counsel and special counsel to have at least one CHL suit against the town dismissed.

Two suits brought by the board of health against CHL have already been dismissed. One was dismissed April 25, 1989. The other was dismissed June 3, 1985.

This leaves two pending suits, all involve action of CHL against the town. One filed by CHL names the state Department of Public Works and board of health as defendants. It asserts that the state is responsible for the discharge of salt into the groundwater around CHL. It asks the board of health to take action against the state.

The other suit, filed in 1986, names the water commissioners as defendants. It charges various individuals with conspiring to violate the civil rights of CHL. The individuals named are: Peter Pratt, William Montuori, Lot Bates, Barbara Kern, John Burns, Marilyn Sweeney and Michael Bliss — people who were past members of the water commission or board of health. The present members of the two boards are not included.

The last action on the case happened in 1987. In 1989, Janice Kelley Rowan of the law firm of Warner and Stackpole sent a letter asking the suit be dismissed if there was no action within 30 days. There was no action. But the suit continues on the court books.

In that same letter Rowan agreed that one of the suits brought by the town against CHL might also be dismissed. That suit was dismissed a few days later.

Still at issue in the filing by SAFE are questions about the installation of a video camera at the gate; a request for CHL to provide $12,000 to $15,000 a year for the salary of a part-time spotter (who would look for hazardous material in trucks heading to the landfill.)

SAFE believes the amount needed to pay for cleaning up contaminated water leaking from the landfill over the next 15 to 20 years would come to $11.25 million to $15 million. CHL has a $750,000 bond to cover what is known as leachate disposal. The sum was fixed by the state.

She's seeking help for Romanian orphans

burst down the door to get in.

"They fought for school they same way they fought for food.

deChiara was mobbed for the first few weeks by children clamoring for the teacher.

Eventually, she established a partial sense of order, but because wood was scarce, the windows were not boarded up and children continued to climb in.

"They would throw rocks and mud and were spitting," she said. "They were very angry especially at the children on the inside of the school and at me.

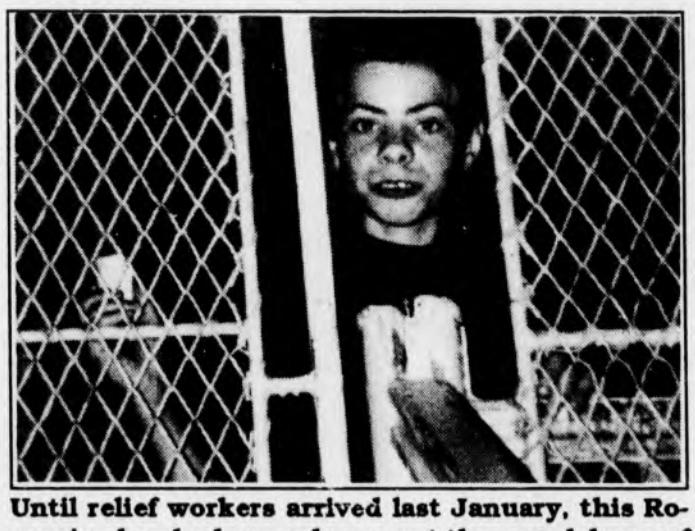
"One thing I wasn't prepared for was the level of aggression of the kids. I thought that because they were cooped up they would be passive.

"If I told a child in a classroom they had done well, I had to be prepared for them to throw their arms around me.

"I had to make a rule, 'no kissing the teacher."

Although the volunteers, who came from Ireland, Britain, Sweden and Norway among other countries, were able to make strides, they were forced to work within the constraints of the Romanian government, who turned a deaf ear to the decades of sub-human treatment.

An orphan struggles to keep covered after his "caretaker" stole the buttons from his shirt which was donated by the Free Romania Foundation.



The infirmieres were particularly hard on the orphans.

"There were a lot of clothing and toys donated," deChiara said, "but you couldn't expect to give the children clothing and have it on the child at the end of the day."

The infirmieres stole everything from soap and plastic spoons to the buttons and elastic bands from the childrens' pajamas.

"We have enough donations," deChiara said. "That's not the problem. The problem was making sure the children kept the supplies we gave them.

"They didn't see the children as children. They honestly couldn't see why anyone would want to give them clothes, or see them clean or give them toys."

Until relief workers arrived last January, this Romanian boy had never been past the caged doors of his second story prison.

After two months, deChiara could feel an anger welling up inside her that told her it was time to go.

"When I went over there I was determined that I wasn't going to pass judgment.

"These people (infirmieres) have lived under harsh conditions for many years and have become completely desensitized.

"But I began to see the results of them beating children too many times.

"I'd see a child screaming, holding his head and see a horrible head wound. Sometimes the skull would be split wide open.

"I'd see the infirmiere holding a broom stick but she'd say that the child fell down.

"I don't know if I stayed there any longer if it could have helped the spirit of cooperation."

The locals were very suspicious of the volunteers at first, deChiara said, and only begrudgingly came to accept them.

"In January they thought the Americans were here to steal the children to use their body parts for medical experiments," she said.

"By June, they still didn't believe we were volunteers. They thought we were being paid a lot of money by the United States government to be there."

Seemingly years younger than he actually is, this nine-year-old Romanian orphan is beginning to make up for the years of malnutrition that have stunted his growth.

deChiara and the other volunteers did become friendly with the ambulance driver and a laundress, but the orphanage carpenter was the happiest at their arrival.

"Part of his job was to scrounge for wood in the summer time to make coffins for children in the winter," she said.

"Last winter he had to make 15 coffins, but this year he didn't have to make any at all."

The Free Romania Foundation desperately needs the help of doctors, nurses, occupational and physical therapists, carpenters and plumbers, deChiara said.

Anyone interested in volunteering or donating may write the Free Romania Foundation Inc. at 725 Concord Ave. Suite 12, Cambridge, MA 02138 or call 617-876-3378.

deChiara, who plans to return to Romania next July, has given permission for the foundation to release her telephone number and will be glad to speak about her work.

Highway funds escape state budget cuts

The Weld administration, bowing to pressure from cities and towns, will not cut Chapter 90 highway assistance from the Transportation Bond Bill. Cohasset stood to lose $205,066 if the cut was approved.

According to the Massachusetts Municipal Association (MMA), Governor William Weld's office was "deluged" by phone calls." They claim that on one day alone the administration received 300 angry calls.

State Sen. Robert Hedlund (R-Weymouth) was one of those who wrote to Weld protesting the cut.

"Governor, the general construction industry in Massachusetts is suffering a severe recession if not a depression," the freshman senator wrote. "I have also received many letters and phone calls, as I am sure you have, from members of the construction industry who are extremely concerned about their future...a reduction in the bond cap would only further devastate the already critical situation of many local construction

• We'll bet that most read of the airplane that went down off of the Cape Cod Canal recently; the pilot had to eject three miles north of the Sagamore Bridge. You probably also read that a Boston-based mine-hunter ship was sent from Boston to try to find the plane, everyone being most interested in how and why the plane went down.

Did you know that Lt. Commander Bill Malloy is the one that manned the mine-hunter ship, and found it? With the aid of sonars and radar the plane was found in 83 feet of water, broken into ten pieces. Cohasset's own Malloy helped the Navy divers and the Marines with the finding of the fighter plane and all of us are pleased and proud of Bill's efforts and success.

• Happy belated birthday greetings to Brendan Mulcahy, some of his friends are still waiting to share a birthday cake with him, but it is very hard to pin down a busy person. We know your day was a happy one Brendan, here's to many more.

• Received a nice note last week from David Foley, the branch manager of the Cohasset office of the Bank of Boston. He wanted everyone to be aware of a program that the Cohasset office sponsors to support the South Shore Art Center and its gallery artists. Every month they feature a gallery artist's work in their lobby for all to view, and this month they are presenting six paintings by Cohasset resident, Kirsten MacNeil. The paintings to be displayed are all local scenes such as "Little Harbor Inlet," and "From Government Island." The Bank of Boston invites all to view Mrs. MacNeil's work during their normal operating hours. The bank is pleased to sponsor local artists and to promote local artists and to promote the South Shore Art Center. They take pride in keeping with the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce's theme, "shop locally," and believe that in these troubled economic times it is important for all town business people and residents to work together and support each other. Be sure to do your part, view Mrs. MacNeil's work, and support a bank that is supporting our town.

• Another belated birthday greeting goes out this week, to Bruce Cameron. Bruce is a kind, hard-working man who seems to have everyone's best interest at heart, and we send him best wishes for a long and happy life.

• Many read in this column last week about Jeff Loughran being ill, and it is with a great deal of sadness that we report that he passed away in Florida last week. There will be a service down the Cape this week, and we must let Jeff's son, Pat Loughran, know how much Jeff was loved and will be missed. Jeff was a fine man, and his son, who nursed him until the end of his illness, is certainly following in his footsteps.

• Received a note from Ellery Clark this week, wanting everyone to know that on an October date, soon to be announced, ESPN will present nationally an hour's program on the Third U.S. National Senior Sports Classic, held this summer at Syracuse, N.Y. Catching the nation's recent attention has been the increased life span of its average citizen and the rising prominence of older and physically more able seniors, which has caused the creation of new senior competitive age groups, including track. Features of this program will include the exploits of a 99-year-old retired Pennsylvania minister in the 95-99 age group and also a segment on two Cohasseters, the late Ellery Clark and his very active son, Ellery Jr. The Clark coverage will include an interview by the son, plus selected track photos of each, from different parts of their athletic careers. We'll let you know when this will air.

• Congratulations go to Sara Anderson, John C. Campbell, Susan McVeigh and Douglas Peck, all of whom are local drivers for cancer patients who have to be driven for treatments. It was especially nice to note that the late Ray Remick was named the outstanding volunteer for the year and that he won the Barbara MacDonald Award for same. Dorothy Remick, Ray's widow, accepted the award and she must have been extremely proud to do so. Just one more corner of the world where people continue to miss Ray and his fine work.

• A tip of the hat to Rob Whelan this week; he was the man behind the successful tennis tournament held a few weeks ago to benefit Children's Hospital. They had 64 team entries, and were successful in raising $6,500 for all of their hard work. Everyone who participated had a good time, and they cannot wait for next year, and the third annual Benefit Tennis Tournament. The only thing that everyone would like to change is the weather, it wasn't good.

• That's the news from here for this week; please let me know what is happening at your house. We all love to hear it.

Job Seekers group starts

With approximately 300,000 people unemployed in Massachusetts, it comes as no surprise to find job support groups emerging in the area.

One such group has just gotten underway at the United Church of Christ, Congregational, 460 Main Street, Norwell. Sponsored by U.C.C., the group meets from 7 to 9:30 p.m. every Thursday at the church. The meetings are free and open to all. The programs are being directed by designated volunteer specialists.

As its name implies, this particular group intends to combine practical information and training in job search, with support groups addressing a variety of emotional, spiritual and financial issues.

The loss of a job can be almost as devastating as the loss of a spouse. Low self-esteem, lack of direction and purpose, and a general sense of helplessness are all common features.

It is not easy to sell oneself; an effective job search is a full-time occupation. But, with determination and perseverance the goal of attaining a new job can be achieved.

tendency to be aesthetic. Adam, on the other hand, hates flowers and prefers to keep his abode free of clutter thus revealing the male tendency to be pragmatic. In spite of these differences, they are still able to develop a loving relationship which sustains them even when they are forced to leave the garden.

The birth of Adam and Eve's first child is marked by an especially touching scene. At first, Adam proposes that the baby is a fish because it always seemed to be surrounded by water and offers to throw it back into the pond. Eve, on the other hand, becomes quite attached to her child and lulls it to sleep during a sweet number entitled "Go to Sleep Whatever You Are."

In the final scene, Eve dies of old age and Adam is alone on stage honoring her memory. He concludes that Eden is everywhere when Eve is with him, and then pauses to water some flowers.

The second act is entitled "The Lady or the Tiger?" Once again, love and desire are the forces which determine the final outcome of the play. The play is set in a semi-barbaric kingdom ruled by an absolute monarch named King Arik (Brendan Clarke). Our hero is a mighty warrior named Sanjar (Doug Moe), who is in love with the king's daughter Barbara. Katy Shea's portrayal of the princess was seductive and passionate.

Barbara is forbidden to love a common warrior such as Sanjar. Therefore, they are forced to share their affection in secret. Unfortunately, King Arik discovers that Sanjar and Barbara are in love and orders that Sanjar be subject to a trial. At this trial, Sanjar is placed before two doors. Behind one door, there is a tiger waiting to devour him. Behind the other door, there is a beautiful lady named Nadjira (Amanda Baker) whom he must marry if he happens to choose her. When Barbara realizes that she can never have Sanjar, she leaves him at the mercy of fate.

The third act is entitled "Passionella." In this play, we meet Ella, a kind-hearted chimney sweep who dreams of becoming a gorgeous movie star. One night, Ella's dream comes true when her fairy godmother appears on Channel 13 and transforms her into Passionella. As one might expect, Passionella is not satisfied with her fame and fortune because she is unable to find Mr. Right. Mr. Right turns out to be a charismatic hippie-cult leader who calls himself Flip, the Prince Charming (David Dowling). Passionella is enamored with Flip but he wants nothing with her because she is not real. In order to win Flip's affection, Passionella resolves to do a movie about a chimney sweep. The public is so moved by Passionella's portrayal of a real working girl that she wins an Oscar for the performance.

At the Oscars, Flip presents the award to Passionella and then proposes to her. That night, the two lovers return to Passionella's apartment where they lounge until midnight at which time Passionella turns back into a chimney sweep and Flip becomes George L. Brown, another lovable geek who had a deal with his fairy godmother. And they live happily ever after. This play owed much of its appeal to the outstanding performances of Kelly Hines whose great stage presence made her doubly delightful as Ella and Passionella.

"The Apple Tree" proved to be an evening's worth of fine entertainment. Over the past fifteen years, the Young People's Summer Theater has established a tradition of theatrical excellence. Productions such as "The Apple Tree" maintain this tradition in fine style.

Craziness

Doesn't it seem as though you just get to where you think you know what things are all about when you pick up the daily newspaper and you have to think again.

Last week, for instance, we read about a 42-year-old woman in South Dakota who is serving as surrogate mother and carrying twins for her daughter. The kids, when they're born, will be her grandchildren. But that might lead you to wonder if the twins will call the woman who gave birth to them "Mom" or "Gram" or "Mom-Gram" - the possibilities are endless. It's too bizarre!

Then there was the recent case of the decapitated Braintree bovines. That was another one for the books and enough to keep the dailies "moo-ving" stories day after endless day for weeks.

Judging from some of the stories we've heard and read recently, it seems as though the sun has dipped too close to this planet with the result that the ozone layer has dwindled, deprived us of needed oxygen and warped the minds of more than a few of our globe's residents.

And, if it isn't bad enough that bad things happen, some nameless, faceless person out there spends hours thinking up jokes to suit even the most heinous occasion.

Remember when a crazed gunman shot and killed all those people in a McDonald's in California some years ago and it was later referred to as a "McMassacre?"

And, you must have been privy to jokes about the space shuttle disaster. They were so tasteless we can't even remember them.

Now, if you can believe it, jokes are making the rounds about Jeffrey Dahmer's alleged string of murders in Milwaukee.

Here's one: It seems that a friend joined Dahmer for dinner one night and said, "I really don't like your mother."

"Then just have the salad," Dahmer reportedly replies.

How about this one — Did you hear that Dahmer was let off on bail?

The next line is: The judge let him off but it cost him an arm and a leg.

Yuk. Pretty poor.

The jokes about Pee Wee Herman's demise are not fit for print, needless to say. Strangely, the only news item we haven't heard too many jokes about is the Kennedy-Smith fiasco in Florida. Maybe that's because we're in Massachusetts and he's our senator. No doubt the jokes are plentiful down south.

There was one we did hear that went something like this: Willie says to his escort that if she doesn't care to spend the night at the compound his uncle can drive her home - a reference to Ted's Chappaquidick fatality - but that's the only joke that's surfaced so far. And, it wasn't much funnier than the rest of them.

This is probably what the medical profession could refer to as our coping mechanisms. We have a hard time dealing with the hideous aspects of the human condition so we make light of them.

And while there has never been a time in history when one human being has not been assaulting his fellow man, it just seems that lately there has been an unusually large incidence of such outbursts.

Some of the supermarket tabloids will have a real party with these stories. Maybe Elvis will be allowed to rest for awhile - or, if they happen upon one of those elusive aliens that decorate their front pages from time to time, maybe they can ask if the sun has come too close to the earth and what exactly is going on. We'd love to know.

I kick the dustballs under the sofa

By Tanna Kasperowicz

There seems to be a new problem developing in Tinytown. So involved, so complex, that there is little doubt in anyone's mind that it will have to be decided by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Now, before I continue, let's discuss a few things. If you go to the Tinytown Building Commissioner's office you can purchase a copy of the Tinytown Zoning Bylaws for $5. Zoning bylaws are created by Tinytown meeting, and are more or less given the legal ok by the attorney general. This does not mean that any of them, if challenged, wouldn't be booted out the door. Bylaws are fragile, created by town meetings and often times people who have little and no knowledge of the law, and approved (sometimes) by attorney generals who have little and no knowledge of the law.

Tinytown's General Bylaws were last presented in published form to 1988 annual town meeting (article #49). There were so many typos and so many questions that the publication was withdrawn and Tinytown has been without a copy for almost five years, now. Regulations are other laws which are created by town boards and committees. If challenged legally, it is thought that many of them would crash. Although most of them are presumably based upon state statute, when they start getting reinterpreted at the Tinytown level they start to sound like a computer with hard disk failure.

Here's the story. No names this week, maybe later this month.

A woman moved out of the country many years ago and while attempting to organize her papers and her will, realized that she and her now deceased husband had four grave lots in Cohasset, lots which she knew she would not use, as she plans to be buried in her new country.

She recently called a Tinytown resident and told him she wanted to give him the lots. Not sell him the lots, give him the lots.

Now, there are Tinytown cemetery regulations which require a cemetery lot owner to sell his or her lots back to Tinytown if he/she is unable to use the lots. Or at least Tinytown has the right of first refusal. My friend, the Tinytown resident was told that while the woman can legally will him the lots, Tinytown officials don't think the woman can legally give him the lots while she is alive. There is apparently no regulation covering invivo gifts. (Tinytown officials are so didactic that they think there must be a bylaw for every conceivable situation which might occur). Town counsel is probably going to get a whack at this.

The reason Tinytown counsel is flooded with stupid questions is because no one is able to think for themselves. Simple deduction: if one can will (give) a lot in death, it must follow that one can give (will) a cemetery lot to another person while still living. If one really wanted to confuse the question, one might ask, rhetorically, whether a nonresident can give a Tinytown resident a grave. But we must not become confused by rhetoric. The important thing is that we don't mistakenly bury anyone who shouldn't be buried.

Tinytown Moderator William Weeks ran an excellent Troika meeting (not televised on Aug. 6). To a real TT junkie, a good meeting is better than the Celtics beating the Lakers during regular season.

From last week's Troika meeting another puzzling question surfaced: Select Chair Tebbetts wants a written opinion from counsel on whether a majority vote is legal. Tradition, Tebbetts. Came about through the Constitution, when the laws were being determined for the Republic. Just one of those things we Americans have always kind of known about.

Knowing how Selectperson Rocco Laugelle feels about women, and because he certainly appeared to be in conflict of interest on July 29, I have found a perfect punishment for him. He should be made to see "Thelma and Louise." They shoot a man in the first 20 minutes of the film. Throughout the rest of the film they toy with men, all of whom are types. Once should be enough.

Wonderful zoning bylaws discussion on the Gene Burns show, WRKO (650 AM), on Aug. 6. Burns is a superior mind. His shows are always capital.

I called Gene over Cohasset's junk zoning bylaw...the one which forces the Tinytown Building Commissioner to have taste and define junk. I said it was a neighborhood bylaw, and quoted 4.3.3 (additional use regulations) explaining how the bylaw was created (according to Dicky Barrow) and how it was recently utilized to take a chair to court. Barrow claims a Tinytownie (now deceased) once became very angry with his neighbor. So, he went to the dump and brought back junk which he hung on his fence facing his neighbor. Voila! 4.3.3 was created by Tinytown meeting in order that this horrible thing would never happen to another "nice" person (nice to be determined by the building inspector).

But, it was the newly voted paper flags bylaw which Gene found most amusing. If the Attorney General ultimately allows flags in the village, but not on 3-A, well then some more common sense has escaped through the Tinytown ozone hole. Gene said: "Is this all (paper flags) they have to worry about in Cohasset?" No, there's other vital stuff.

At their Aug. 5 meeting with the Conservation Commission, Selectman Diana Kornet said she found the size (number of commissioners, not their physical size) of the Conservation Commission "daunting." The Conservation Chair had to remind Kornet that state statute requires seven members on this commission of which she is one of the appointing authorities. Boggles ones mind, how little some of the Tinytown Selectpeople know about government. No, it's not Greg Doyan's fault. It's not town counsel's fault. Selectmen should know their numbers and letters when they come on board.

Tinytown Selectpersons govern like I dust...a finger over the doorsill, an elbow over the mantelpiece, kick the dustballs under the sofa.

Richard Coughlin, a power of example

Richard James Coughlin, 42, was a man who battled the disease of alcoholism successfully.

He died Sunday, Aug. 11, at South Shore Hospital, Weymouth. A funeral Mass was celebrated Wednesday in the Church of the Resurrection in South Hingham.

He hadn't picked up a drink or a drug for more than two years before being stricken July 2 by a brain hemorrhage. But his liver had been damaged during the active years of his disease.

He was a man of honor, dignity and courage, having made his peace with God and man.

He underwent brain surgery July 4 and spent the next two weeks in a coma. After regaining consciousness, he prayed for acceptance, patience and courage. He was given all three.

He was able, at 40, to turn his life around.

He was able to give and receive love. He could talk about his feelings of fear, doubt and insecurity. He could cry. He could demonstrate his sensitivity.

He was tolerant of those still coping with drug addictions and alcoholism but he did not choose to spend his days or nights with people who were stuck in a pattern of negativity.

He was tolerant of intolerant people.

For two years, he began his days on his knees in the morning asking his Higher Power to keep him away from a drink or a substitute. He would get down on his knees again at night and thank God for another day of sobriety.

commentary

He graduated from Project Turnabout, a Hingham-based residential program for adult men who are addicted to drugs and alcohol. Only one man in 100 who enters the program graduates — most quit, some are asked to leave. He entered the program at PT on July 5, 1989. He was proud of his accomplishment at PT and continued to participate in the activities of the house after completing requirements for graduation.

He belonged to at least two groups in Alcoholics Anonymous, attending AA meetings with regularity and commitment. He worked his program with as much energy as he had put into his search for oblivion in the earlier years of his life.

He worked the steps of the AA program to the best of his ability. And although he was not yet halfway through step 9, the promises were beginning to come true in his life.

The promises of AA are written on page 83 in "The Big Book." They guarantee those who are painstaking will:

"Know a new freedom and a new happiness.

"Will not regret the past nor wish to shut the door on it.

"Will comprehend the word serenity and ... will know peace."

The promises go on to say:

"No matter how far down the scale we have gone, we will see how our experience can benefit others. That feeling of uselessness and self-pity will disappear. We will lose interest in selfish things and gain interest in our fellows. Self-seeking will slip away. Our whole attitude and outlook upon life will change. Fear of people and economic insecurity will leave us. We will intuitively know how to handle situations which used to baffle us. We will suddenly realize that God is doing for us what we could not do for ourselves."

He understood his reprieve from alcoholism was the result of daily effort. He understood the meaning of the phrase: "One day at a time."

He was grateful for his sobriety and for his family who had continued to express support for him throughout the years when his disease was winning.

He once said his only regret was that his mother hadn't lived to see him sober.

He was grateful for the miracle that gave him a second chance to live.

He was grateful for the support of his friends from Project Turnabout — staff, residents and other graduates.

He was grateful for the support of his friends from AA — people who applauded his story and understood his battle against loneliness and fear.

He came to understand that he never had to be lonely again.

Lothrop House celebrates its 170th anniversary

The Reverend John Lothrop, a dissident Puritan minister from Kent, England, arrived in the Plymouth Colony settlement at Scituate in the year 1634. In 1640 he moved to Barnstable where subsequent generations remained. By the time of the Revolutionary War one line of the Lothrops had moved to Cohasset where Rev. Lothrop's great-great grandson Colonel Thomas Lothrop became the town's highest ranking military officer.

A generation later, May 8, 1799, Caleb Lothrop was born to Peter and Betsy (Tower) Lothrop. In 1819 Caleb married Mary Snow, daughter of Captain Ephraim Snow, and following her death he married her sister Jane. Caleb followed the trade of his father as a ship owner and ship chandler and owned a wharf at the harbor. He served the town as treasurer and as a selectman.

Four years after his first marriage he built a substantial Federal home on Summer Street near South Main Street. According to Joel Willcutt's diary it was on Aug. 23, 1821 that the walls of the new house were raised. Today that 1821 dwelling, the only brick-ended Federal home in Cohasset, is the headquarters of the Cohasset Historical Society and will be the scene of a celebration marking the 170th anniversary of the raising with a full weekend of events on Aug. 23, 24 and 25.

The weekend events will get underway Friday, Aug. 23, with a wine and cheese reception and art exhibit at the Lothrop House from 4:30 to 7 p.m. A special exhibit of Cohasset related artworks of the 19th Century will be featured, and there will also be a display of Lothrop family pictures and memorabilia.

On Saturday the 24th, there will be two bus trips, starting at the Lothrop House and visiting some of Cohasset's significant historical areas. Each trip will include commentary by Society guides. The first, starting at 1 p.m., will be to Jerusalem Road and Atlantic Avenue. The second tour, at 3 p.m. will traverse the ancient highway of King Street and to Beechwood and the site of the Mordecai Lincoln ironworks at Mill Lane.

Saturday evening there will be a clambake, under a tent at the Lothrop House beginning at 6 p.m. A pancake breakfast on Sunday from 7:30 to 11 a.m. will conclude the weekend celebration. Tickets may be purchased separately for all events or in specially priced combinations, and are available through the Society and at its museums in Cohasset center. The Society's phone is 383-6930.

Edgar foes appeal pact to state attorney general

By Tom Henshaw
Mariner staff

Opponents of Boston Edison's plan to revive Edgar Station in North Weymouth have appealed to the attorney general for "advice and counsel" on the legality of an agreement between Edison and the Weymouth Board of Selectmen.

A portion of the agreement deals with the possibility of the town supplying water for the new generating facility. The town's water is controlled by the Weymouth Board of Public Works which refused to sign the agreement.

"Given the Board of Public Works' position on water supply and its request for removal of all terms and conditions regarding water supply from the Board of Selectmen's agreement, we question the validity and legality of this portion of the agreement," said the letter from WATER.

WATER is an acronym for the group Weymouth Against The Edgar Revitalization. The letter to Attorney General Scott Harshbarger was signed by WATER spokesman Nancy Zerfoss.

Harshbarger is already on record with a brief urging that the State Energy Facility Siting Council (EFSC) to deny Edison's request to site the 306 megawatt plant on grounds that its power in not needed.

Under Section 4-B of the agreement signed by Selectmen and the Board of Health, Boston Edison is pledged to "provide substantial assistance (an estimated $1 million) to the town's water system" in exchange for as much as 600,000 gallons a day of town water.

The DPW, in a comment to the EFSC on the agreement, asserted that the Board of Public Works "will be the sole negotiator with Boston Edison on all water issues," adding that "there are many uncertainties about whether the town will be able to supply the facility's water requirements."

Selectmen acknowledged that the DPW controls the town water but they went ahead and approved the agreement by a 3-2 vote.

WATER's letter to Harshbarger also challenges the legality of Section 4-C under which Edison agrees to prepay up to $1 million in fees or property taxes in Fiscal 1993 to be credited against future bills for taxes and fees during the first five years of operation.

"This is in consideration of having the Board of Selectmen not file a brief with the EFSC," said WATER.

"We question the legality of this consideration given the constraints of Proposition 2 1/2.

"If 'appropriate state agencies' disapprove this prepayment of $1 million. what effect will such disapproval have on the entire agreement?"

The State Department of Revenue has already indicated that the financially strapped town would not be able to use the prepayment until the year in which it is due.

WATER's appeal to the attorney general also asked his advice on the validity of "any other aspect of this agreement that may not be appropriate."

"We would specifically like to know," said the letter, "if the Board of Selectmen have any right to negotiate water supply issues without the concurrence of the Board of Public Works.

"We would also like your opinion as to the validity of the entire agreement given the previously noted circumstances."

Meanwhile, as Weymouth debated with itself over the issue of water for the Edgar plant, the city of Quincy of moving in to play a role in the situation.

City Councillor Michael Cheney proposed that Quincy sell to Edison a portion of the water it receives from the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority (MWRA).

Since the city buys the water wholesale it would make a profit of up to $340,000 a year which would go to lowering cost to its MWRA ratepayers. Weymouth's water system is not connected to the MWRA.

There is in existence a small water main under the Fore River from Quincy to the Edgar plant that was last used many years ago.

Should Quincy be permitted to supply MWRA water to Edgar, it would relieve the town of a possible strain on it water system but, on the other hand, it would lose the $1 million promised by Edison for improvements to that system.

Letters to the Editor are welcome, but must be signed for publication.

Melodies flowed as Belafonte entertained entertainment review

By Bruce Compton

"From the top of his head right down the white shirt, he's the most beautiful man I ever set eyes on," Diahann Carroll once said of Harry Belafonte. One of America's foremost balladeers of the last forty years, Belafonte performed at the South Shore Music Circus Sunday evening, August 11, not with a white shirt, but a mottled dark purple one, and grey double-knit stretch slacks.

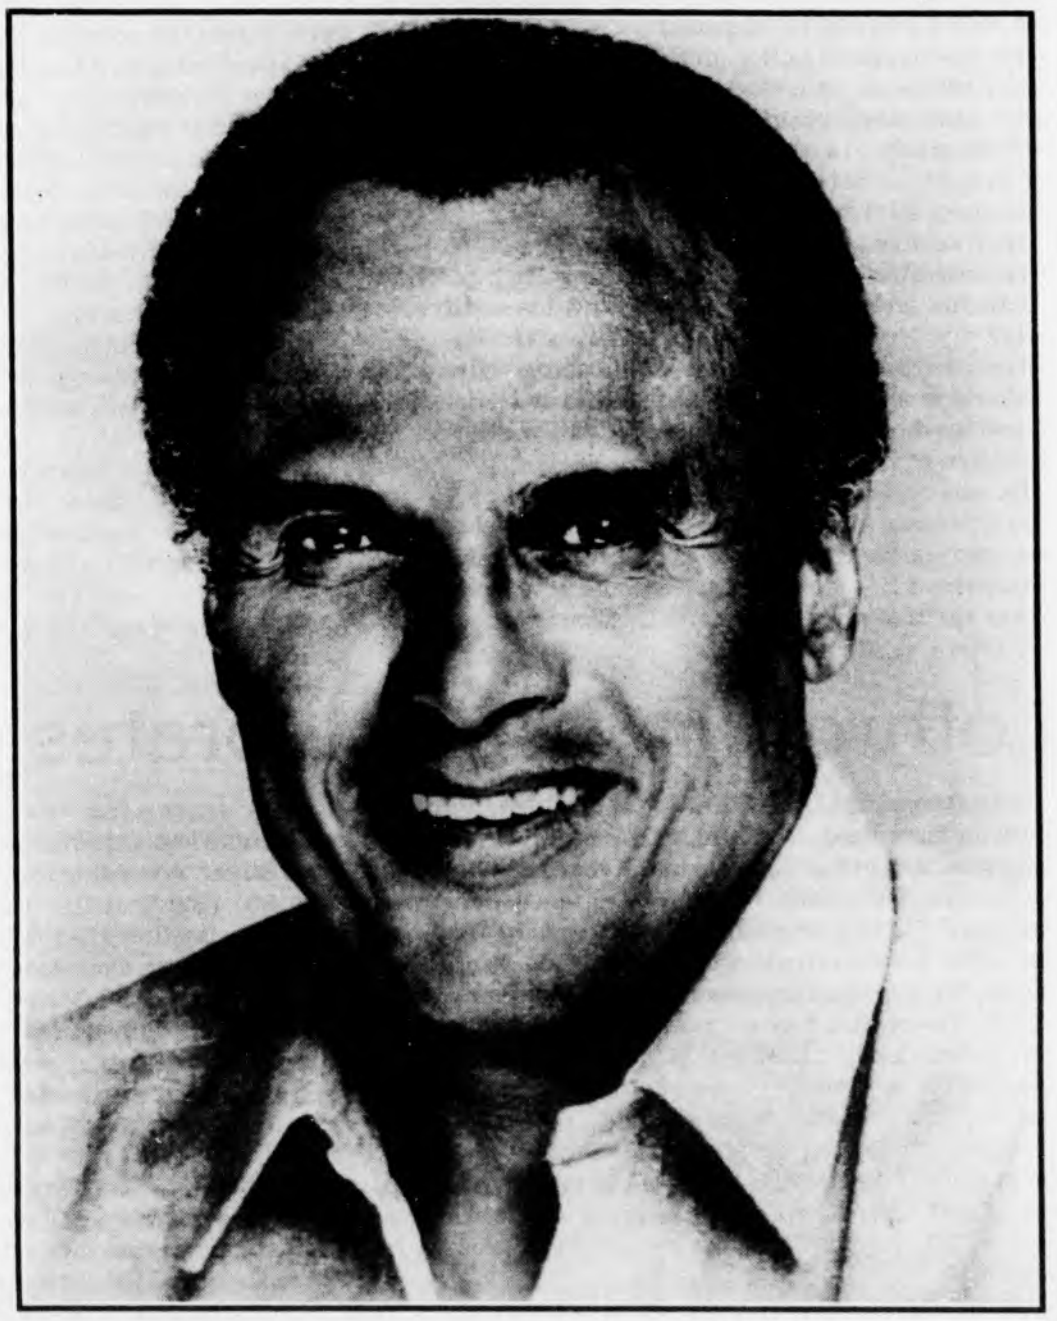
Belafonte performed a selection of folk and calypso songs with his ten-piece band, which included the fine workmanship of Jose Nelta on guitar; and David Bravo and Robbie Robinson on keyboards. One male and two female backing vocalists, all brightly clad in tropical costumes, danced in the orchestra pit throughout the show. Two South African percussionists; a bass guitarist; and a drummer, completed the instrumental section.

Lovely flowing melodies led the way on the title cut from Belafonte's 1988 anti-apartheid album, "Paradise in Gazankulu. "Belafonte beat a shoulder-harnessed bongo, one-handed, while the percussion, including triangles, congas and tom-toms enveloped the night. He reminisced his way through the thoughtful "Islands in the Sun," from his second album, 1954's "Belafonte." "Day-O," which Belafonte calls "probably the single biggest song of the entire repertoire," was originally released on his 1955 classic, "Calypso," which was the first album in music industry history to sell one million copies.

Recalling the honor which the late Jim Henson had bestowed upon him by inviting him to perform with the Muppets, Belafonte dedicated "Turning the World Away," one of Henson's favorite songs, to his memory, as the heavy African tribelike percussion beat filled the tent. "Skin To Skin" had the audience join in with Belafonte's female vocalist in the midst of their duet. Xylophone and claves on "Suzanne," one of the slower ballads of the evening, combined with an amplified maraca backbeat to create a sensuous grainy effect.

In an attempt to increase his repertoire of folk songs, Belafonte had hired someone to travel the country and tape record old and unusual folk songs such as those sung by prisoners, cotton field workers, and river boatsmen. Dozens of the songs were selected for study and recording.

An actor in numerous Broadway plays and musicals; which represented an opportunity to blend singing and acting; and as a star of western movies, Belafonte learned to apply his theatrics to that of the folk ballad. He became the first folk singer in entertainment history to command giant audiences.



Folk purists would cry fake, but Belafonte would claim that his approach to folk material always was highly personalized. "I've got to grow," he would say. "Anyone who tries to stop me with nonsense about what is or isn't commercial is in for a fight." Some would criticize him for being too theatrical, while others recognized his high level of seriousness as that which set him apart, and entitled him to be called "artist" rather than "entertainer."

"Art is a mirror of life," he said. "But the important thing is to reflect that life so as to make it better."

One of the evening's liveliest responses resulted from "Jamaican Farewell," in which the men in the audience did not sing very well when invited to join in; when "women over forty" were beckoned for their part, no one answered. Everyone enjoyed "Hava Neguila," especially Harry, as he strutted round the stage in the throes of a Yiddish chant. Timpanis, steel drums, and other Caribbean percussion instruments outlined "Mary Ann." An up-tempo drum beat dominated a spiced-up version of "Matilda," which carried on for about 20 minutes.

"This song was of no great significance, and had no great influence on me as a boy," Belafonte said. "It was out of desperation that I ever included it in my repertoire. I was playing to an enthusiastic audience that kept demanding encore after encore, until I had sung so many songs, I began to scrape what I considered to be the bottom of the barrel , and came up with "Matilda," inviting them to sing with me. Well, the rest is history. The word got out, and I have never been able to live it down. All over the world the people love "Matilda," the worthless woman. There must be some moral here, some lesson that keeps escaping me."

"Without all the superficial things — without the automobile and the automation," he says, "people are basically the same. There is one thing that will always perpetuate folk art. That is, as long as there are people, there'll be a folk. As long as there's folk, there'll be folk art."

Harry Belafonte

Leahy accepts the appreciation of friends

honor Leahy.

There was a plaque that carefully spelled out the details of the lifetime membership. It did not call for any action on Leahy's part to take effect.

Leahy, his wife Patricia, and their children all seemed to enjoy the hospitality of the group. Meagan, 9, busy for the day with friends of her own but the rest of the Leahy family was on hand to enjoy the sunshine. The children include: Ashley, 7, D. Crandon III, 4, Tessa, 2, and Madeline, who is seven months.

In accepting the goodwill and generosity of his peers, Leahy said that it has been to his benefit to be an active member of the Chamber.

"I'm the one who gained from the valuable education and knowledge," he said. He talked of his pleasure in working for the Chamber.

He said he has promised his wife and children he will use the job change to be more active in his family life.

And so while Leahy explained how honored he felt by the gift of a lifetime membership in the Chamber he helped found, he did not go so far as to promise more active participation.

Leahy was the first recipient of the Forest King Award, now known as the Chamber's most prestigious annual honor.

He talked about the responsibility he feels to speak out on issues of politics. He does plan to keep right on talking his mind.

Most of the town's businesses are somehow involved in the Chamber. This Wednesday, the group gathered once again — at Kimball's — to enjoy a breakfast meeting and hear Wayne Ayers of the Bank of Boston talk on small business in the 1990s.

Hedlund challenges MWRA 'untimely' salary hikes

By Sen. Robert Hedlund

Although August is traditionally a quiet month in State Government, it has not been so quiet for the Massachusetts Water Resource Authority. The unprecedented rate increases, municipal assessments, salary increases and overall lack of accountability has elicited a strong reaction from Massachusetts' legislators.

On August 5, I put forth a Resolution that condemned the recent MWRA pay raises, and supported towns that withhold their assessments as a means to persuade the MWRA to rescind that very untimely pay hike. The Senate adopted this Resolution unanimously, just as the House of Representatives had previously done. This vote is a declarative statement by the Legislature that change must occur.

Additionally, two of my Senate colleagues authored legislation which would exact change on the MWRA by reforming its budget process. I and several other Senators signed onto this Bill, and it is my belief that we will all be hearing a great deal more about this proposal in the future.

HIGHER EDUCATION

Earlier this year Government Weld authorized the creation of a 19 Member Commission which will advise him on higher education policy. This Commission's existence reflects the consensus that changes and improvements must be pursued in our State colleges and universities. As one of only four legislators appointed to this Commission, I will have an opportunity to more closely examine the problems that challenge the Massachusetts higher education system.

The Commission will also consist of various business and academic leaders who are familiar with higher education in Massachusetts. Clearly reform is needed, and I believe that it is the responsibility of this Commission to present recommendations to the Governor which will make our higher education system more efficient, and one which will more effectively service the students of Massachusetts. The Commission will analyze matters such as funding levels, governing structure, quality of curricula and other substantive issues of concern.

It is my hope that beyond all of the rhetoric about education, this Commission will begin a process of addressing the real problems of Massachusetts State colleges and universities, and will help rebuild the confidence of Bay State students and parents.

If you have any views that you would like to share with me regarding the aforementioned Commission, please feel free to write my office at The State House, Room 416B, Boston, MA 02133.

South Shore Hospital emergency staff gets set to cut the ribbon at the ceremonial opening May 1 of the new emergency center, part of $16 million expansion. The second half of the project, a $7.7 million maternity center, opens Monday August 19.

Hospital unveils birthing unit, plans open house

South Shore Hospital will open its $7.7 million maternity center and unveils its new birthing unit to patients Monday, Aug. 19.

The public will have a chance to tour the facilities — including postpartum rooms and expanded special care nursery — Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Sunday from 10 to 2.

Visitors should use the main entrance in the Emerson Building, facing Main Street (Route 18). The parking lot is located off Fogg Road.

The South Weymouth hospital has one of the busiest maternity services in Southeastern Massachusetts.

The 32,000 square foot center occupies the second and third floors of a $16 million building that also houses the hospital's new emergency center.

President and Chief Executive Officer David T. Hannan said the new maternity facility will enhance South Shore's "ability to deliver family-centered care by providing comfortable, spacious and modern surroundings for families — from the moment they enter the hospital until they leave with their infant."

Special care nursery beds for infants with medical problems at birth have been increased from six to eight. The special care unit is one of only three Level II (for babies who need special monitoring) nurseries in the area. The expansion makes it possible for more families with infants needing on-going hospital care, to receive that care closer to home.

South Shore Hospital provides 24 hour coverage by neonatologists (physicians specializing in newborn medicine) and pediatricians in the nursery.

The hospital's vice president of patient care services, Richard Aubut, RN, called the nursery "a bridge between the South Shore community and the neonatal intensive care units in the Boston hospitals."

"We can care for high-risk children from the South Shore who would otherwise have to be hospitalized in Boston."

The maternity center also includes a 36-bassinet well-baby nursery, a new birthing unit with nine labor/delivery/recovery rooms, two operating suites for cesarean births, a 32-bed maternity unit, classrooms for childbirth education and on-call rooms for medical staff.

It replaces a unit opened in 1954 in the west wing. However, the hospital has been delivering babies since it opened in 1922.

The staff includes 21 obstetrician/gynecologists, four certified nurse midwives and 23 pediatricians.

Last year some 2,200 babies were born at South Shore Hospital.

The $16 million combined emergency and maternity project is being funded by bonds an a $3.2 million fundraising campaign.

The expanded emergency center opened May 1.

Tunnicliffe named junior cotillion director for Greater Boston area

The National League of Junior Cotillions has announced the appointment of Amy Mills Tunnicliffe as director of the program in the Greater Boston area.

Children from Cohasset, Hingham, Norwell and Scituate are invited to participate in the Junior Cotillion program, which features etiquette and ballroom dance training for sixth, seventh and eighth grade students. The program includes six classes and two balls over an eight-month period. The classes will be held from September through March, one evening a month, at St. John's Church in Hingham. The two semi-formal balls will be held in December and April. The December Holly Ball will be held at the South Shore Conservatory of Music.

The purpose of the program is to give young people instruction and practice in the courtesies that make life more pleasant for them and those around them and to provide opportunities to practice and enjoy these skills at memorable classes and balls. The classes will involve training in the waltz, fox trot and beach shag, as well as the usual courtesies associated with dancing. Students will receive thorough instruction and practice in social niceties such as table manners, telephone courtesy, making introductions and thank you notes. After constant practice in a peer group, boys and girls are expected to leave the program with the confidence and poise that comes from knowing the correct thing to do in social situations.

The 1991-92 Advisory Board members are Sandra Baker, Linda Braun, Bev Cherry, Maureen Doran, Linda Henderson and Gail Scott.

Mrs. Tunnicliffe has served on the Board of the Welcome Wagon Club of Hingham and as a youth group advisor at St. John's Church. She is a member of the Junior League of Boston and is a volunteer at the Mary Martha Learning Center.

The National League of Junior Cotillions is headquartered in Charlotte, NC, where the program was established in 1979. Executive Director Anne Colvin Winters said, "We are delighted to see this training available in the Boston area. It will have a positive and lasting effect on the self-esteem and social (continued) development of young people."

Enrollment is limited to 25 boys and 25 girls per class. Registration will take place during the month of August. An informational Mother's Coffee will be held Monday, Aug. 19, 7:30 p.m. at St. John's Church, Main Street. If you would like to attend the coffee or wish your child to receive an invitation, please call 740-0077.

Shoefitting and Supply Day

Cohasset Community Center will have the fall Shoe Fitting and Supply Day Aug. 20 from 4 to 6 p.m. At this time, dance shoes, etc. from the Duxbury Dance Studio will be available at reasonable prices. Classes will begin Sept. 9.

If a child needs new dance shoes or tights or leotards, orders will be taken. Children will be fitted. All students will wear pink ballet shoes and black tap shoes this year for the show. Any color is suitable for class. Children must have socks to try on the dance shoes (thin for ballet and sneaker socks for tap). All orders must be prepaid. Although our "old shoe box" has depleted, bring in your old shoes. If you can find a pair that fit, you are welcome to trade at no charge.

No orders can be taken after this date.

Call the Center at 383-0088 with any questions.

Fair offers discount admission

In tough economic times, organizers are trying to give Marshfield Fair patrons a break this year.

The 124th annual fair, which opens today and runs until Aug. 25, will offer discount coupons reducing admission from $4 to $3 as well as offering a $15 pass for the entire fair and an $18 pass for the entire fair with parking.

"We know the economy is flat," said fair secretary/treasurer Carlton E. Chandler. "But we're looking to have people come to the fair and have a good time and forget for awhile how bad things are."

The special coupons can be obtained at the administration building.

Chandler said the fair has worked twice as hard on promotion this year in order to draw more people to the fair.

Last year the fair drew under 100,000 patrons. The fair has averaged between 108,000 and 110,000 each year for the past 10 years, according to Chandler.

In addition to the reduced admission offered, there are other specials.

Seniors have an admission rate of $3 instead of the regular $4. And Aug. 22 is Senior Citizens Day where seniors get in free.

"I told our people if someone says they are a senior, then we should let the m in free," Chandler said.

Tuesday Aug. 20 is Independence Mall Day whereby the purchase of eight ride tickets entitles the bearer to eight more tickets free if they have a coupon from a participating store at the mall.

And on Aug. 25 people can pay $10 and ride all day at the carnival.

In addition to the special admissions deals, there are several major attractions to this year's fair.

Three Boston Bruins will sign autographs.

On Aug. 17, Ken Hodge Jr. will sign from 1-3 p.m.

On Aug. 22, Bob Sweeney will sign from 7-9 p.m.

And on Aug. 23, Jeff Lazaro will sign from 7-9 p.m.

Also the Perfect Gentlemen will perform on Aug. 20 at 7:30 at the grandstand.

The Platters will perform Wednesday, Aug. 14 at 7:30 at the grandstand.

Other bands such as Yankee Jack and Marie and Tavares will perform during the fair.

Something new this year is the Irish Festival which will be held on Aug. 25, the final day of the fair.

Artists such as the O'Learys Step Dancers and the O'Reilly's will perform.

obituary

Alice G. Daunt

Alice G. Daunt, educator, community leader and activist, a long-time Cohasset resident, died Monday following a brief illness.

She was an educator in the Boston school system for 24 years before moving to Cohasset where she taught in the Deer Hill School for 20 years.

A strong advocate for the frail and elderly, Mrs. Daunt, 81, served on the Cohasset Council on Aging from 1975 to 1983 and on the South Shore Elder Services Board of Directors where she chaired several committees and served as Treasurer. She was also Secretary to the advisory board and major fundraiser for the South Shore Coalition of Transportation (SSCOOT) a transportation provider for the handicapped.

Mrs. Daunt, an active member of the Cohasset Dramatic Club since 1954, played major roles in numerous productions. For many years she donated her time and voice to TIC of Marshfield, a radio station for the blind, where she broadcasted mystery stories.

She was born and grew up in South Boston. She graduated from South Boston High School and attended Teachers College where she received her degree in education. She and her husband, the late John F. Daunt, moved to Cohasset in 1954.

Deeply committed to her community and social issues, Mrs. Daunt was a political activist who served as treasurer of the Cohasset Democratic Town Committee for 17 years and worked actively in many political campaigns. She served as Registrar of Voters for Cohasset since 1983. She worked diligently for the Cohasset Social Service League's Consignment Shop in many capacities, most recently as Volunteer Coordinator. She also donated her time generously to the South Shore Art Center.

Her devotion to those less fortunate than she was most reflected by her cherished volunteer work at Lourdes, France. For 16 years, Mrs. Daunt spent one month each year working in the hospitals at Lourdes. At home she served as a liturgical minister at St. Anthony's Parish and for many years chaired the Book Committee for the Cohasset Village Fair, an annual fundraising event hosted by the local churches.

She was a mentor and friend to all she met. However full her schedule, Alice Daunt always found the time to give to others in need.

Mrs. Daunt leaves a brother, Roger Dunne of Whitman; a sister, Mary Hiteshew of Frederick, MD; two nieces, Jean A. Cox, Fairfax, VA and Mary Ellen Langan, Vienna, VA; a nephew, P. Gregory Hiteshew of Frederick, MD; 13 grandnieces and nephews; and many devoted friends.

Memorial donations may be made to Lourdes Bureau, 698 Beacon St., Boston 02215.

A funeral Mass will be held in St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset, Thursday, Aug. 15, at 10 a.m.

The tall ship Little Jennie docks in Hingham Harbor

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

The not-so-little Little Jennie, a 107-year-old tall ship out of New York, will be docked in Hingham Harbor for the next two weeks.

The recently restored ship is in town as the centerpiece of Coastal Ecology Camp, a camp jointly sponsored by the New England Wildlife Center (NEWC) and the Maritime Center based in New York.

When Gregory Mertz took over as director of the NEWC last year, he said he wanted to expand the center's educational programs. He said he wanted to bring people outdoors, not bring the outdoors inside. Bringing Little Jennie to the South Shore is an exciting example of this philosophy in action.

Thirty local youths, between the ages of 10 and 18, will participate in the camp-at-sea program with daily trips aboard the ship.

The camp's first session began August 12 and will end on August 16. The second session will run from August 19-23.

Campers will explore fresh and saltwater ecosystems, local ecology, wildlife and learn about seamanship and maritime history. Among the camp's planned highlights will be an overnight camping trip on an uninhabited Boston Harbor island and the presentation of individual ecology projects.

The campers will also study oceanography, boat navigation, and marine biology. Water quality and environmental concerns will also be investigated.

Each of the students will also get the opportunity to steer the Little Jennie and help raise and lower its majestic sails.

The NEWC is a non-profit organization, located at 19 Fort Hill St. in Hingham. The center cares for injured or orphaned wild animals and is also dedicated to educating the public about wildlife and environmental issues. The Maritime Center, based in Long Island, New York, is a non-profit organization dedicated to promoting seamanship, water safety, the restoration of historic vessels and heightening awareness of the marine environment.

This past weekend, NEWC volunteers and supporters had the chance to spend an afternoon at sea aboard the ship.

It was a chance, not only to enjoy a pleasant day boating, but an opportunity to learn about the program and Little Jennie's history and its future.

Little Jennie is literally a piece of history; the ship is listed in the National Register of Historic Places. Supporters of the ship point out that despite a major renovation, Little Jennie still has more than 90 percent of its original wood. By comparison, the famed Old Ironsides, now docked in Charlestown, only has about 10 percent of its original wood.

The Little Jennie, now docked at the Hewitt's Cove Marina on Route 3A, will be open to the public, on the following dates and times:

- Aug. 16, 3-5 p.m.
- Aug. 17, all day when at dock
- Aug. 18, 11 a.m. to 3 p.m.
- Aug. 22 4-6 p.m.
- Aug. 23, 3-6 p.m.

The ship will also be available for public tours and charters on weekends and some evenings. Charters will benefit the NEWC and are tax deductable. For more information call the NEWC at 749-5387.

Photographers on exhibit

The works of two photographers are the focal point of an exhibit running August 20 through October 5 at the South Shore Art Center, 119 Ripley Road in Cohasset.

Thomas Boone, who recently moved to Hingham from Pennsylvania, focuses on abandoned places in his platinum/palladium prints. Thomas Petit, of Brockton, explores his subconscious through a series of photographic self portraits.

An opening reception will be held on Thursday evening, Sept. 5 from 6 to 8 p.m. The exhibit, however, officially opens Tuesday, Aug. 20 with the re-opening of the Art Center, which was closed for three weeks for summer cleaning and vacations.

A Gallery Artists Exhibit will run concurrently in the Dillon Gallery and Clement Micarelli will be the faculty feature. The exhibition is open to the public Tuesdays through Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. For more information, call the Art Center at 383-9548.

Call for auditions

Hingham Civic Music Theatre needs artistic people who want to be "Bewitched, Bothered and Bewildered." Must be able to act, sing and dance.

Auditions for Rogers and Hart's classic musical "Pal Joey" are scheduled for Aug. 19 and 20 from 7 to 9:30 p.m. at Hingham High School Auditorium. Call backs are Aug. 22.

Artistic Director James Sullivan is looking for 15 speaking parts. Choreographer Susan Delorey wants seven dancers who can execute jazz, ballet and some tap steps. Lead by Musical Director Sal Bartolotti and produced by Barbara Cartmill, the show will open Oct. 19 with performances on Oct. 25 and 26.

Services for seniors

Services for Seniors is a service which helps make homemakers, home health aides and nurses more accessible to elders in need of assistance with personal care, meal preparation, light housekeeping, shopping, companionship, or respite care.

Names of these workers are provided free of charge to elders, who then negotiate directly with the workers. Those wishing to learn more about the program may call Mary Beth Worrick, program coordinator, at 383-0771 or 383-0821, Tuesday or Thursday from 9 a.m. until noon. Services for Seniors is a program of the Social Service League of Cohasset and is partially funded by South Shore Elder Services.

Swimmers with style

Thursday, Aug. 15 at 7 p.m., at Cohasset Town Hall, the Cohasset Swim Center, under the direction of Abbie White, will present "Charlie and the Chocolate Factory."

Tickets are $3 and may be purchased at the door. For information call 383-9463.

Summer reading party

All children who have participated in this summer's "Wizardread" reading program are invited to a party at the Paul Pratt Library on Friday, Aug. 16 at 3 p.m. Refreshments will be served and entertainment provided by special guest storyteller Marilyn Pope. Over 100 readers have turned in reading cards so far.

Mrs. Pope's program will include: "Lady in Black," "Prinderella: a fractured fairytale," "The Rabbi and the 29 Witches," and "Taily-po." She will also be happy to honor any requests for other old favorites—please call the library at 383-1348 if you have a request.

Mrs. Pope was formerly children's librarian at the Paul Pratt Library and is currently at the Middleboro Public Library. She has a background in the art of storytelling.

Hurricane Bob uproots history and downs power

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

Hurricane Bob plunged Cohasset and surrounding towns into darkness Monday, as high winds downed power lines and uprooted trees.

The hurricane was also blamed for the cancellation of two days of location filming on the Steve Martin movie "Housesitter.

Producer's plans to film in Cohasset Monday and Tuesday were promptly cancelled when word of Bob's impending visit was announced. While Cohasset center shop owners secured their stores and taped windows, the "Housesitter crew took in the props, awnings and signs they put up to transform Cohasset into Dobb's Mills

Throughout the day Monday, townspeople were urged to tape windows and stock up on supplies.

Despite warnings issued to many seaside residents, only two people took refuge at the Red Cross shelter set up in Cohasset High School.

At Kirby's Country Store on Route 228 in Hingham a steady stream of residents stopped in to pick up essentials.

Producers of the movie "Housesitter" spent nearly 10 hours on Cohasset Common August 16 to film just a few seconds.

Additional Cohasset filming planned for Monday and Tuesday was cancelled due to Hurricane Bob.

Hundreds gathered across the street from the common to watch the filming; many commented that the slow-moving process was a far cry from the glamour they expected.

Stargazers were rewarded for their patience, when actress Goldie Hawn, the star of "Foul Play," and "Private Benjamin" began filming her scene shortly after 2 p.m.

Friday's scene was a reaction shot as Hawn steps off a bus and gets her first look at the idyllic common. The entire scene will run less than 30 seconds.

Between takes, onlookers were able to catch a glimpse of Hawn's off-screen love interest, actor Kurt Russell. Hawn's on-screen lead, comedian Steve Martin, was not in town for Friday's shoot. It was not known if he would appear in any of the Cohasset scenes.

The art of film is also the art of illusion and the producers had a few tricks in store for Cohasset.

The biggest trick was transforming Cohasset into the School choice plan fails to win favor

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

The school system will not participate in the "School Choice" program when school's open in September.

The school committee met Aug. 15 and discussed the concept. The decision was to wait. No vote was needed to delay.

Only two families have contacted the school superintendent about the possibility of using the new state program. Last year there were four tuition students in Cohasset.

School Supt. Stephen Hart told the committee most other towns are following the same course.

Hart said there are too many questions at this time.

"Philosophically the idea troubles me," Hart said. But he went on to say there is no assurance that accepting the choice program will not cost the community money.

cohasset's week

Out of state travel

The high school girls soccer team will be heading out of state Aug. 30 and 31 for a competition in Keene, N.H.

School committee gave the trip its blessing when it met Aug. 15.

The girls will be staying with families in the Keene area. The bus driver will stay in a motel, according to the plan.

No school contracts yet

Labor negotiations were the subject of a closed school committee discussion after the regular meeting Aug. 15.

No contracts are ready for ratification and school begins in two weeks.

Window wall work begins

A company from Malden, AA Windows, was given the bid for work on the window wall at the high school last week. The company was the low bidder of the job out of a field of nine. Town meeting and the override vote provided $100,000 for the work. Bids ranged from the low of $83,000 to a high of $160,000. Work will continue through the fall.

New locker rooms at CHS

The locker rooms in the basement of the high school were renovated over the summer by the school department.

John Jacobucci, a maintenance worker for the school system, did the job. The boys locker room underwent major renovations. The ceiling was dropped, a new floor laid, new lockers purchased. This year it will be used as the girls locker room. Last year one of the out-of-town sports teams refused to change in the locker area because of its condition.

The entire school committee toured the locker areas at the meeting Aug. 15. All had praise for the effort.

This year the boys will use the girls locker area which is undergoing some less extensive renovation.

School appointments

The following new teachers and other school staff members were appointed by the school committee Aug. 15:

• Laureen White, business education at the high school. She was employed in town two years ago. She replaces a teacher who is retiring.

• Also back in business education is Joan Wool who will have a 2/5s position since the retiring teacher was paid at a higher scale.

The addition means keyboarding is back in the schedule.

• Maueen Duffy, home economics at the high school. She will work a .8 position as opposed to the halftime position last year.

• Bill Antolini, industrial arts. He will work fulltime replacing another retiring teacher who worked halftime last year for the same money. He is capable of teaching computer assisted drafting. School officials have yet to work out the details of how to provide him with a computer. He is considering creation of a track club. The sport was dropped due to budget problems.

• Ronald Ford, halftime physical education. This is an addition, one of the few, in the budget. His hiring will mean Michael Gill will no longer teach physical education. Gill is the health educator.

• Charles Doody, special education. He replaces a retiring teacher.

• Donna Dunbar, fulltime library aide at the Osgood School. She has worked as a school librarian in the past.

• Joan Mead, secretary at Deer Hill School.

School choice plan fails to win favor

There is legislation filed for the coming session that might force an accepting community to provide transportation funds.

Hart pointed out the school system would earn more under the choice program than it now receives through Metco, the 20-year-old program that brings Boston students to Cohasset. He pointed out that as it is set up, there would be no transportation for the students and that there would be no coordinator. The Metco program has been cut in recent years. Last winter a group of parents helped fundraise to keep a late bus.

Hart said that under the guidelines he is not allowed to ask questions about an incoming student on issues of academics or behavior. The guidelines were drawn to prevent discrimination.

The only acceptible reason for refusing a student would be lack of space.

He pointed out that special needs students would be allowed more money than regular students in the state tuition payment but the amount would be based on the average cost for their particular program prototype rather than upon the actual cost.

"You might make money, you might lose money," Hart said.

There is legislation pending that might make an accepting school system responsible for the cost of evaluating a special needs student who entered the program and then was identified as needing the Chapter 766 work.

School Committee Chairman Barbara Bliss said she agreed with the cautious approach.

Nancy Sandell, another committee member, said she has seen the program work in Minnesota but that it seems it was put together in too much of a rush here.

"They are quick fix ideas," Sandell said.

School Committeeman Ralph Kidder said that while he agreed with the wait-and-see approach, he wanted to keep an open mind.

No vote was ever taken on the issue.

Workers on Route 3A clear trees off utility wires following Hurricane Bob's attack on Monday.

Lunch price goes up

The price of lunch at Osgood School will rise 10 cents at the start of the school year despite the fact that some school officials and parents agree it wasn't worth what it cost most of last year.

The lunch program is contracted out to Canteen Inc. No one from the company was present at the school committee meeting Aug. 15, but School Supt. Stephen Hart made asked for the 10-cent increase in elementary lunch, bringing the cost to $1.35, explaining that the company had improved the lunches at the end of the year and promised to continue the quality and size of the portions if the increased price were allowed.

A coupon system will be used to allow students to pre-pay.

Here's how Eastern Utilities restores your electricity.

The work begins before the storm does.

Well before a major storm hits, Eastern Utilities is gearing up for it.

We plot a storm's path. We estimate its severity and its time of arrival. All employees stand by to fulfill their storm-emergency assignments. This includes having extra people ready to take phone calls. If the storm warrants, we arrange for assistance from other utility companies.

Priorities – safety and timely restoration

Whether storm damage is isolated or extensive, a major concern of Eastern Utilities is safety of the general public. Wire-down situations receive our highest priority.

Restoration crews start by securing downed wires while other line crews repair transmission lines from generating plants to major substations. This is the beginning of the process of restoring service to the largest number of customers as rapidly as possible.

Next, supply lines to distribution substations are restored. Then, main feeder lines from substations to neighborhoods and secondary lines off these main lines are repaired. Line crews then concentrate on critical facilities such as hospitals, water-pumping stations, sewerage-pumping stations and police and fire stations. Individual services to residential, commercial and industrial customers are then reconnected and energized.

If your neighbors have had electricity restored and you have not, the problem may be your service entrance cable on the side of the house. If that's the case, your electrician can make the repairs.

When damage is widespread, listen to our reports on your local radio station for storm restoration updates.

We know being without electricity is an inconvenience. Even with the best equipment and people available, restoration efforts take time. Repairing downed lines and damaged equipment is difficult and time consuming work. Eastern Utilities works hard to restore your power as promptly as possible.

Remember to stay away from fallen wires!

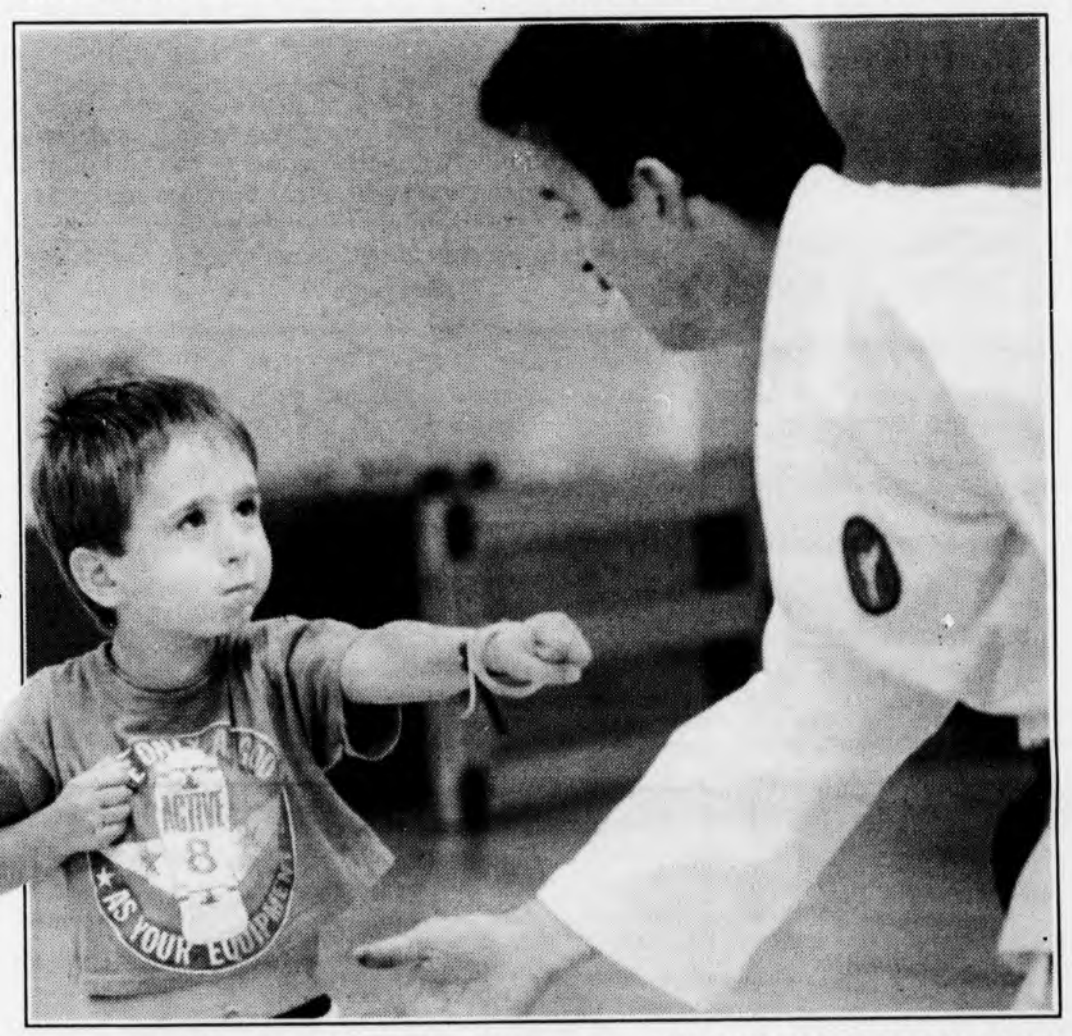
Flying Scot district race results

Cohasset hosted the annual Northeast District Championship races last Friday and Saturday, attracting Scots from as far away as Connecticut. The 28 boats raced in what Cohasset Fleet Captain Steve Bartow called a competitive series.

"It was very competitive," Bartow said. "We had a lot of top national Scot racers show up." Gary Powell of Duxbury is in the top five nationally, and he placed second behind Ned Lawson, also of Duxbury.



Cohasset's George Wey was right in the thick of things, placing fifth behind Duxbury's Tom Phipps. Wey and Phipps were actually tied after the five races, but Phipps snuck ahead, having beaten Wey three times out of five.

Aside from Wey, "Cohasset tended to occupy the bottom half of the list," Bartow said. "But the great turnout from our fleet shows that we're willing to race whenever we can to keep improving. No one really got turned off by all the tough competition."

Bartow, who organized and coordinated the weekend, thanked those who helped in making sure everything ran smoothly. "Rick Swanborg handled all the registrations, which helped immensely," Bartow said. "Ann Musto did an outstanding job running Friday night's clambake, and Terry Duggan took care of coffee and doughnuts every morning, which is very important."

"All the racers commented on the great courses, and that was because of Sam Wakeman." Wakeman, from the Cohasset Yacht Club, headed up the race committee and set up all five courses.

Bartow gives the weekend's wind conditions much of the credit for the successful weekend. "We ran the full gamut on wind; from light breezes to steady wind to 20 mph gusts," he said. "No one could really complain that their preferred wind never showed up. We had any kind of wind condition you'd want."

It never rains on recreation's parade

By Alison Cohen
Mariner correspondent

The summer of '91 could be a record breaker. For the past 15 years, it has never rained on the final day of the Recreation Department's Summer Playground program. The playground program has also never gotten through a season without at least one rainy day.

Whatever the weather, the kids in the program plan on having fun as usual. The program continues to grow by leaps and bounds each year. This year 300 children between the ages of 3 and 12 registered for the program. Average attendance on any given day is 175, up from 125 two years ago. Recreation director Jack Worley worries the playground program may become so big that it will outgrow the space at Osgood School.

One impetus behind the growth in participation is the economy. Many parents find they can no longer afford pricey summer camps, but want their children to have a good time during summer vacation. Full-time campers pay $125 for the season. Three and four year olds attend mornings at a cost of $100. Even at these bargain rates, many residents find it hard to come up with the money. The recreation commission tries to ease the burden on families by offering installment payment plans and financial aid where necessary.

"It's hardest for families enrolling two or three children," Worley said. "It's tough to come up with one big lump sum."

The pied piper in charge of the merry crew at Osgood School is Ted Carroll, affectionately called Teddy Bear by his pint-size charges. Carroll has been part of the playground program for sixteen years—eight as camper, eight as staff member. For the past five years he has been head honcho.

Even during the off-season, Carroll is never far from kids. He works at the South Shore Sports Center in Hingham. This fall he plans to return to school. He will attend Bridgewater State College and major in physical education and sports administration.

Carroll credits his staff and community volunteers for making the playground a place kids want to be. And his college-age staff keeps coming back year after year.

"We look for people with early childhood education and psychology backgrounds," Carroll said. "Most want to be teachers. We're very selective."

Talking with Carroll means always being interrupted by life's little problems. Someone is always whispering in his ear, hanging on his arm or looking for a little TLC.

"Ted, Ted! I have red spots on my foot from my shoe."

"Ted, I lost my hat. It's a good one, a Red Sox one."

"Ted, do I have to go bowling today? I already paid though."

Carroll confesses the cure for all of life's woes seems to be a judicious application of bandages on boo-boos real or imagined. This summer the playground staff has pasted 1500 bandages on assorted arms, knees and noses. The most popular feature pictures of G.I. Joe or the Care Bears.

"We could use a full-time volunteer mother who is a registered nurse," Carroll said. "She could hand out bandages all day."

When they aren't tending wounds, the staff offers the kids a full day's worth of fun. There are organized games, arts and crafts projects, and scads of special projects and programs.

Swimming lessons are offered three times a week at the town pool. They trek down to the Community Center for bowling, head to the library for story hours and enjoy Crazy Days every Tuesday.

What, you ask, are Crazy Days? Tuesdays find the kids sporting wild and weird T-shirts, bizarre glasses or assorted other get-ups. They have also celebrated Halloween, Christmas and their unbirthday.

And then there are the field trips. Every other week the playground group travels off in search of adventure. They've roller-skated in Whitman, stalked dinosaurs at the World Trade Center and frolicked at Star Land. A trip to the whale center in Plymouth is on top for this week. The children's theater at the South Shore Music Circus next door is another special program.

Kids who want to go on the field trips must pay $3 to cover transportation and admission costs.

"We try to keep the costs low so we don't exclude any child who wants to go," Worley said. "But we do have to be 100 percent self-supporting."

The children don't have to travel in search of entertainment. Every week something special happens at the playground. During the course of the summer, magicians, jugglers, story tellers, rap dancers and trick bicyclists have entertained at the playground.

"We have to provide variety if we want to keep the Fall golf lesson classes

The Cohasset Recreation Department has announced registrations for a special four-week session of golf lessons, taught by golf pro, Chuck Young.

The special fall class will begin on Wed., Sept. 11, and continue four weeks, through Oct. 2. The program fee will be $35 per person. To register, please call the Cohasset Recreation Department office at 383-6791.

Classes will meet from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m. each Wednesday evening during the four weeks. Golf clubs will be available for loan. This program is ideal for new golfers.

Winter, indoor golf classes are being planned once again for this winter and details regarding indoor lessons will be announced in October. Young is an area teaching pro, and a former Pan Am player.

kids coming every day," Worley and Carroll explain. The proof of their success is in the cadre of 10-12-year-olds who come and the 13-year-olds who ask if they can come back as playground assistants.

"The bigger kids are one of our biggest assets," Worley and Carroll agreed. "They help the younger ones out. They'll even take them by the hand to make sure they're running the bases the right way."

Not all is fun and games. Safety officers and health professionals provide programs each Monday.

When all else fails, there's always the playpark at Osgood School.

"They love it," Carroll said. "They never get tired of it."

Amazingly enough, some things never change. Pale pink polo shirts with alligators may have given way to neon splashes, but kids love the same games and crafts their parents did. They play tether ball or Crossfire, paint rocks and make gimp lanyards.

"Some things just don't change," Worley said.

Some things do change. According to Willy McArthur, juice box popping contests are the best.

"They really make a loud noise," he said. The key is to make sure the carton is empty—otherwise it doesn't make any noise, but makes a mess that will make any mother mad.

Recently campers and counselors enjoyed a sleepover in the courtyard at Deer Hill School.

"Sleep was a loose term," Worley added.

The staff set up 24 tents in the courtyard and regaled campers with traditional ghost stories. Deer Hill's resident cat, Kitty Deer, chaperoned the event.

As the season winds down, staffers are planning the annual cookout for the final day. Worley and Carroll take time to thank all the town officials and employees, parents and organizations who supported and contributed to the success of the playground program.

After a season of blazing heat, Carroll only comes up with one wish for next year. "Shade. We could really use more shade," he says. "Does anyone have a big tent?" And if Mother Nature doesn't cooperate, he may need that tent for the cookout.

❑ Ensign Patrick O'Connor graduated from Villanova and was commissioned in the Navy in May. After summer duty at the recruiting district in Boston, Pat has reported to the Naval Supply Corps School in Athens, Georgia. Watch out for all of the up-coming hurricanes, Pat, they are real beauts there!

❑ The Cohasset Chamber of Commerce is going to have a great meeting in September, the purpose of it will be to bring together the various elements in Cohasset to talk about the village and what can be done to make it a vibrant business district that preserves as much as possible of the quaint village character. The Chamber is hoping that this meeting will garner some ideas to help fill up some of the vacancies in the village and help to develop some sort of overall program for revitalization of the village. If you have any good ideas, why not see a member of the Chamber (any of the local shop-owners will be able to help you). The meeting will be held on Wednesday, Sept. 11 at the South Shore Art Center.

❑ The Community Center Summer Camp program has some great news this week, their program has been extended an extra week due to the popularity and fun the children are having. Camp will now be offered the week of August 26 through 30 from 9 a.m. until noon. The special feature of the week is "The Magical Sea" and the cost is $60 for the week. Please call the Center at 383-0088 to register for this last week of summer fun.

❑ Our applause goes to State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray on her recent appointment as Massachusetts Chairman of the Women in Military Monument and Museum Committee. She was appointed by Gov. William Weld, and we know with her interest in women veterans (she is a U.S. Marine Corps veteran) she will do an admirable job.

❑ Congratulations go to James Walsh this week, he is a former Northeastern University football and hockey star that will really shine! He was recently selected to the Northeastern Hall of Fame.

❑ W. Dennis Moran, senior vice president of Camp Dresser and McKee Inc. was recently appointed to the Board of Directors of the Environmental Business Council. The Council heads more than 100 environmental and energy firms, and provides environmental engineering, scientific planning and management services worldwide. Hmmm, could he be helpful in the recent Cohasset Heights Limited controversy?

❑ Our town is certainly bustling with movie activity this week, everyone seems to have "seen or met" a star that enthralled them, even if it was from a distance...did you or a member of your family have such an experience? If so, call and share your news with us, we'd all love it.

❑ Burt Pratt and David Wadsworth have a nifty Historical weekend planned this weekend, beginning this Friday, Aug. 23 with a wine and cheese reception and an art exhibit at the Lothrop House. People will be shown some of Cohasset's significant historical areas, with a commentary. Saturday night there will be a clambake at the Lothrop House, and they will conclude with a pancake breakfast Sunday morning. Here's to good weather for all of your events gentlemen, hopefully this will inspire more people to become members of the Cohasset Historical Society.

❑ The Cohasset Recreation Department ended its 1991 Summer Playground in style last Friday, with a professional D.J. from Rack a Disc Entertainment. Most of the 298 children enrolled in the program danced all day, taking a break to have hot dogs and all sorts of goodies provided by parents. Members of the Recreation Commission and parent volunteers prepared the cookout. This year's staff with 53 years of Summer Playground experience between them, should be given a round of applause for their exceptional work once again this year. Members of the staff include: Playground Director Ted Carroll, Program coordinator Lyn Pompeo, Diana Pereria, George Umbrianna, Mike Pinney, Stephanie Endris, Paulina Rosano McDonald, Rob Gavin, Chris Conley, Matt Pederson, Katie Ryan, and Jessica MacDonald.

❑ Sara Bishop of Cohasset, has been named to the Plymouth State College Dean's List for maintaining a grade point average of between 3.5 and 3.69 during the spring semester of the 1990-91 academic year.

❑ The Cohasset Recreation Commission, Director John Worley, the summer playground Staff, and the parents and children of the program are indebted to the volunteer efforts of Mrs. Rebecca Bates McArthur. Mrs. McArthur came to the playground program every morning and used her exceptional skills and resources to rejuvenate the Arts and Crafts Program.

That's the news from here, don't forget to give me a call with your tidbits!

Simple pleasures deserve respect

The good news of the week is the latest success of the recreation department's annual summer playground program.

Another fine job. An outstanding turnout.

People who think expensive programs are better than the economy version need to watch the recreation department in action. Shoestring budgets require imagination and high energy to succeed and thankfully the staff of the playground program has the ability to see beyond simple barriers.

It was the largest year the playground director could remember. But more important than drawing in children to fill up space on the playground, the program gave a relaxed and safe space where kids could play.

One of the families involved sent a note to the director that explained the difference between the town playground and "fancy" camp. The difference is that the kids love the staff of the playground program.

If you stopped by, you could see why.

Rules were implemented for safety but the atmosphere was as loose as an old sneaker.

Obviously the playground program isn't perfect for all children. Some need constant attention and the numbers just don't work out that way. Some kids happen to be addicted to high tech games.

But watching a game of kickball in the playground, following the kids running through the maze of playground equipment, buying a fake hot dog for three pebbles from the kid-operated hot dog stand — it seems like the world is back in a simple time.

We want to take the time to praise the entire group responsible from the members of the town recreation commission to Jack Worley, recreation director to the actual workers in the playground.

Incidentally many of the recreation commission members could be seen checking out the playground, sometimes volunteering. They include: Richard Barrow, chairman; Stephen Endris, vice chairman; Terry Duggan, secretary; Shelanne Durkin; Mary Muncey; Donald Staszko and Thomas Wigmore.

Ted Carroll put in one more good year as playground director.

Lyn Pompeo was coordinator of the program for three- and four-year-olds.

Others on staff include: Diana Pereria, George Umbrianna, Mike Pinney, Stephanie Endris, Liz O'Leary, David Shumaker, Erin Monahagn, Paulina Rosano McDonald, Jennifer Endris, Rob Gavin, Chris Conley, Matt Pederson, Katie Ryan and Jessica MacDonald.

And thanks to the supporters

The recreation department's playground program is sponsored in part by: Rotary, Cohasset Heights Limited, Goodwin Graphics, Good Sport, Rockland Trust, Baybanks and the state Cultural Council. The department issued a special thanks for help of various sorts to: the school system, Super Stop & Shop, the highway department, the Swim Center, Cohasset Community Center, Joan Kovach, Rebecca MacArthur, Deanna Mulligan, the Cohasset Mariner, Jim Hamilton, Linda Farrag, Carrol Printing, Ms Merritt Transportation, the fire and police departments.

Worley gives playground staff thanks . . .

letters

(The following letter was sent to the Mariner for publication.)

Dear Staff:

It has been a distinct pleasure having each one of you a part of our Playground staff this year. The recreation commissioners join me in gratitude for your efforts and dedication to the children and program.

As you all know, there was a significantly larger than usual number of children registered for Playground this summer. More impressive than the 300 youngsters registered, were the daily average attendance numbers, which remained extraordinarily high during the entire seven weeks. This, I suspect, had a great deal to do with each one of you and is an indicator of your success.

For some of you, 1991 may have been the last summer that you will be available for Playground counseling, while others may consider returning next year. No matter which is the case, all of you should be proud of the job you did this year and your efforts have been universally noted and appreciated.

I'd like to wish each of you the very best for the upcoming year. Some of you will be returning to classes, while others will pursue a career. In either event, I wish you happiness and success and if I can be of any assistance to you, please do not hesitate to contact me at any time.

Once again, on behalf of the recreation commission, our many thanks for a great summer, your efforts and your volunteer time as well. I hope that each of you has realized the sense of satisfaction that is often associated from working with children. Children tend not to forget both teacher's and camp counselor's and your impact on our children has been a very positive one indeed.

Jack Worley

(Editor's Note: Mr. Worley is the director of the Cohasset Recreation Commission.)

. . . and resident thanks Worley, others

To the Editor:

Thank you to David Shumaker, for his letter praising Ted Carroll for the outstanding job he does as Cohasset Recreation Day Camp Director. I couldn't have expressed it better myself!

I too have experienced Ted's selfless efforts meeting needs and carrying out his responsibilities. The Town of Cohasset is indeed fortunate to have such a dedicated person working for our children.

David Shumaker, Chris Conley, Rob Gavin, Mike Pinney, George Umbrianna, Matt Peddison, Stephanie Endris, Jenny Endris, Diana Pereria, Liz O'Leary, Erin Monahan, Paulina Rosano, Lynn Pompeo, Katie Ryan and Jessica McDonald deserve our thanks for the terrific job they do caring for and entertaining our children during the summer program. My son has had a wonderful, safe, fun-filled experience at camp because of these hardworking people.

Jack Worley has put together a staff we can be proud of!

Sincerely,
Linda Snowdale

Beechwood and Osgood rec. facilities upgraded

Both the Beechwood and Osgood lighted basketball/play areas have received a great deal of attention lately by the Recreation Commission, through a blending of public and private resources.

The Cohasset Recreation Commission, while unable to afford upgrading of these areas via budget expenditures, coordinated both private and public resources, that combined, were capable of completing the necessary expenditures and work.

The Cohasset Highway Department, under the leadership of Mr. Harold W. Litchfield, Superintendent, has provided man-power equipment and 'expertise, essential to the undertaking of the projects. Mr. Arnie Reppucci, Head CHS Basketball Coach, has acted as technical consultant to the recreation commission, regarding purchase and installation of appropriate, outdoor basketball equipment.

Through advanced planning and detailed coordination of materials, equipment and men, Highway Superintendent Litchfield was able to provide, gratis to the Recreation Commission, the hot top needed to resurface the Osgood School Court. The men of the Highway Department did the actual re-surfacing, resultant in a first class playing surface at Osgood Facility.

New basketball standards, boards and rims were purchased by the Recreation Commission, per the request of Mr. John Rolandelli, from interest that had accrued in the Beechwood Improvement Association Fund. However, the regulations for use of the BIA Fund, preclude use of it's revenue for such things as erecting the new equipment. Once again, Mr. Litchfield and the men of the Highway Department came to the rescue and took on the highly technical job of erecting the new equipment, per the proper specifications. Mr. Reppucci remained on site with the Highway Department and Recreation Commissioner and Chairman, Mr. Richard P. Barrow, to assist with any developing technical difficulties. Without problem or flaw the new equipment was made functional within a day's time, allowing 24 hours for the cement casing for the goose-neck basketball poles to harden. Well beyond the scope of usual functions of a Highway Department, the Cohasset Highway Department performed the difficult task at hand with both ease and expertise.

From another private source, the Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club, new basketball equipment will soon be purchased for use at the refurbished Osgood outdoor, lighted court. The Basketball Booster's Club has been instrumental in supporting various children and Youth Basketball programs and projects for a number of years.

Thusly, town children and youth have two upgraded, first class areas in which to play basketball and or other sports, via the combined efforts of private groups, Town departments and numerous individuals all of whom are interested in the welfare of our youngsters.

In the near future further purchases will be made from accrued interest in the Beechwood Improvements Association Fund for upgrading of the Beechwood Field, playground apparatus, for younger children's pleasure.

There has been a great deal of expense and effort applied to these projects by numerous individuals; town officials, private groups and private citizens. The outdoor, lighted facilities will be in first class condition in the very near future and it is expected that those who use them, do so properly. There remains no revenue and very little patience left towards acts of vandalism, or misuse of facilities. The facilities are your facilities for your own use—Please treat them accordingly as they in fact, do belong to you.

The Beechwood basketball area upgrade was accomplished via coordination employment of both private and municipal resources. The revenue necessary to purchase the new poles, boards and rims became available from the accrued interest of the Beechwood Improvement Association Fund, left in trust, for recreational needs of the Beechwood area children/youth. Expenditures made from the interest accrued in this fund involve private residents, the recreation commission, and Town Treasurer who oversees the Fund .

Purchasing of new basketball equipment is only the initial phase involved in updating the play area. Essential is the necessary manpower equipment and expertise in order to erect the new equipment. Once again, Harold Litchfield and the men of the Highway Department, came to the rescue, providing the above ingredients vital to construction.

Mr. Arnie Reppucci, Head CHS Varsity Basketball Coach provided technical assistance, helping throughout the various phases of the project. Through a blending of private and public resources the status of two lighted, outdoor recreational facilities has been enormously improved.

There is, of course, a lot more detail involved with projects such as these and in fact, many town departments and employees and officials have lent a hand and volunteered services. Tree and Park were and Highway Department's are all involved both in the project per se and on an on-going maintenance basis as well.

The Recreation Commission will attempt a third project soon, at Beechwood Playground and via the request of residents of Beechwood, Recreation Commission plans to upgrade the playground equipment at that site.

Before winter, numerous town departments will again turn-to and Elm's Meadow skating area will be made suitable for winter ice skating, as it has been made ready, each year for the past 15 years.

Once in awhile you hear complaints that town departments do not coordinate service or resources. From the perspective of your recreation commission nothing could be further from the truth, and projects of this sort have been going on for many years.

Numerous deceased fail residency test

By Tanna Kasperowicz
Mariner correspondent

Just a brief update on the Tinytown cemetery regulations. If you moved to Tinytown yesterday and died today, you couldn't be buried in either Tinytown public cemetery. You must have resided here six continuous months in order to be buried publicly. But what if you had already bought your beach sticker and your landfill transfer sticker and gotten your library card and paid the back taxes on the home you bought at auction? What if your forebear who became president of the United States lived in Tinytown in 1800 and served on the school committee?

What if your Uncle Tobias Litchfield Tiny named the town and was the minister of its first church? What if your forebear Larry Laugelle Tiny killed all the Indians? (Unfortunately, and not by choice, you were born in Poughkeepsie, NY).

Would any of these considerations make a difference?

You betcha. Sources say there are a lot of people in Beechwood and Woodside who have not fulfilled the residency requirement for many of these same reasons.

Jessie "the dog" Redfield blew a big chance to be in "Housesitters" last week. Nobody was home at the Redfield's so she followed her nice new neighbor, Cindy, downtown. As Jessie watched Goldie Hawn get off the Plymouth-Brockton bus 400 times, one of the directors noticed the brown and white mutt with the small head sitting under the tree with Cindy. "Perfect" they said when they saw Jessie. "Just the dog we've been looking for."

When the director asked Cindy if Jessie could be in the movie, Cindy said it wasn't her dog, and she didn't know if Jessie would stay. Because no one knew how to tell Jessie she was hired, it was decided that Cindy should be in the scene with Jessie and a leash was needed. (Dobbs' Mill has a leash law; in Tinytown dogs running free must either be under voice control or have their owners' permission. Jessie has always had the Redfield's permission to take walks by herself, or to attach herself to anyone walking by. Like Sparky Porter, she especially likes babies).

So, while everyone was discussing Jessie's contract, and deciding who should get the leash, Jessie resolved to continue the walk by herself, which she had the Redfield's permission to do.

The last scene was of the "Housesitter" staff chasing Jessie across the Common. After Jessie disappeared, the director didn't seem to be interested in Cindy (who is very attractive) anymore. Ah, well, who can figure Hollywood?

Once an Olympic trainer, always an Olympic trainer. Sue Jackson is trying to discipline Jane Bishop and Geraldine Henry to synchronize swim at Sandy Beach. Sue said it's been a difficult month, with the Blue Fish and all.

Cablebob said he asked to be on the Tinytown selectpersons' Aug. 12 agenda, but was refused. Cablebob said he wanted to discuss the inconsistency of enforcement of the bylaw with "the bosses of the building commissioner," who are the Tinytown selectpersons (also the Tinytown cemetery commissioners).

Selectperson Diana Kornet said the issue should be discussed with the zoning board of appeals or the planning board.

Executive Secretary Greg Doyan said the subject was not an appropriate one for the Tinytown Selectmen (whose main agenda item that evening was fruitless pear trees. The result of the fruitless pear discussion was that the fruitless pears could go to Concord, but they couldn't die. Please note. The concern herein was that tree travel wasn't in what the selectpersons call their movie contract; and you know how the Tinytown selectpersons hate surprises).

Also, selectpersons weren't aware that the trees would be in planters, and this was greatly disturbing (although I'm not sure Rocco game a damn). Plus, there were only to be six trees instead of eight—another alteration of the then unsigned and probably still unsigned movie contract (sic).

Selectperson Rocco Laugelle told Cablebob to "put it in writing." Why should he? No one else does.

Selectperson Jane Goedecke said the selectpersons had no facts and couldn't discuss Cablebob's issue. But this was a suspicious statement, because having no facts has never stopped Tinytown selectpersons before. Cablebob said this issue was "the hiring authority's issue; it's in your purview, the building commissioner works for you."

But, they would have none of it.

commentary

The Tinytown selectpersons hire a lot of people in Tinytown, but after they hire them they just sort of drop them. A couple of months ago Selectperson Martha Gjesteby suggested the board require a weekly log from a department head the selectpersons hire, but the rest of the selectpersons all thought that would be tacky, with one selectperson suggesting that Mrs. Gjesteby might have an ulterior motive for bringing this up. These films are so strange.

Had an interesting discussion with a Tinytown nurse and a pre-med student last week. "Final Exit" which debuted last week is already in its fifth printing. The book tells people how to die, if they should need to do so.

Here's how the conversation went:

Me: You have to understand, people are not afraid to die. They're afraid to live, that's why "Final Exit" is in its fifth printing.

Pre-med: But I'm going to be a doctor; I'm going to save lives.

Me: When I need to be saved, I'll see you. But whom do I see when I need to die?

Nurse: I wish all the people who want to save everybody could be me for a day, and see the terminal people we're saving.

Pre-med: I'm not sure I can be involved in saving lives and ending lives at the same time.

Me: Why shouldn't the person who escorts birth, escort death? Why can't they be the same?

Nurse: They are the same. One does the job well; the other leaves much to be desired.

SAFE congratulates board of health

SAFE has congratulated the Board of Health for their recent actions to better oversee the operations of the Cohasset Heights Ltd. (CHL) landfill.

"The Board of Health has taken forthright actions, at their August 13 meeting, to better regulate CHL," said Alix White, President of SAFE.

"We congratulate the Board of Health for firing Paul Barry as the spotter at the landfill," White said, "and for appointing themselves or their agents as spotters for now."

"Also, we are glad to see that the Board has agreed to comment on the woefully insufficient Existing Facility Permit Application (EFPA) filed by CHL with the DEP," she said.

"However," said John McNabb, Jr. SAFE vice-president, "we urge the Board of Health to take further positive action, at their September 10 meeting, to reopen the site assignment hearings on the operation of CHL."

"It is imperative that these site assignment hearings be reopened," said McNabb. "Re-opening these hearings will be the most effective way for the Board to protect the town from potential contamination from CHL."

"CHL must be required to pay for 30 years of leachate collection and removal after they go out of business," McNabb said. "If CHL doesn't provide these funds," he said, "then the taxpayers of Cohasset may have to pick up the tab."

Hurricane Bob uproots history and downs power

"Most of the supermarkets are out of batteries," Kirby said, adding that he was also down to his last packs of "D" cells. He said business at the convenience store had been brisk all day and that shoppers were stockpiling "bottled water, flashlights, eggs, milk and beer."

A similar scene took place at the Stop & Shop on Route 3A.

Cars almost completely filled the Cohasset supermarket's parking lot; inside the store lines ran all the way down the aisles.

"I would call it a mob scene," said employee James Forde of Scituate. "This whole place has been mobbed since we opened this morning."

Throughout the storm Stop & Shop, lit by an emergency generator, remained open.

Mike Cisneros, an employee of Tedeschi's in Cohasset Center, said customers had stripped his shelves of batteries and candles.

"It has been much busier than it usually is," he said.

Cisneros said he planned to stay open as long as the roads remained open

Shoppers were not the only ones making last minute preparations; all along the ocean, boaters were busy securing their property.

Cohasset Harbormaster Irving Gadow said there was little activity going on in Cohasset Harbor during the calm before the storm.

"People are just securing their boats," he said earlier in the day. "We are just sitting back and waiting."

Hank Brennan of Weymouth was among the many who flocked to Hewitt's Cove Marina in Hingham to check on their boats.

Brennan said that most boaters should have expected that Bob would hit. He said he remembered the "incredible damage" caused by The Great Hurricane in 1938.

Brennan said that hurricane was devastating because nobody was prepared.

"It took everyone as a complete surprise," he said, explaining that weather tracking equipment then was a far cry from the technology used now.

Even the best preparations, however, are no match for mother nature.

Within minutes of Bob's arrival calls began pouring into the police and fire stations. Throughout town trees were uprooted and branches snapped and skittered along most side streets. The high winds knocked down power lines and destroyed several fences.

A historic, centuries-old Buttonwood tree on Beechwood Street was one of Hurricane Bob's victims.

According to John Seavey, the owner of the tree's home at 339 Beechwood St., sections of the huge tree were blasted-off by gale force winds.

The tree, possibly the oldest in Cohasset, has an almost mythological significance to history buffs.

Legends say the tree was planted as a tribute by a father whose son was on his way to fight in the revolutionary war.

"It is probably one of the oldest trees in town," Seavey said Tuesday as he cleared some of the branches from his yard. "It is a shame; this tree has been a landmark for many years."

Another of the tree's many legends concerns a fortune in gold and jewels that may be hidden somewhere among the tree's highest branches.

The story goes that a member of the famed Cohasset Bates family (who once owned the historic home) was a sea captain who brought a live monkey back from his travels to keep as a pet.

John Seavey of Beechwood Street surveys the damage after a historic buttonwood tree on his property was ripped apart by Hurricane Bob's gale force winds.

Unfortunately, the monkey had a penchant for stealing his neighbor's jewelry and stashing his ill-got gain somewhere in the tree, possibly in a hole near the top.

Legend has it that no one has been able to find the monkey's fortune.

As of Tuesday, Seavey said he was disappointed to report that only a yellowjacket nest and no jewelry, was discovered in the felled tree.

Alicia Seavey said her family had precious memories of watching families of raccoons raise their families in the tree. She said she would miss having the tree and said it was a source of stories and pleasure for years.

Both said they were pleased by the prompt response and community spirit after they saw the tree fall.

"The town has been wonderful," Seavey said. He said, "the second the tree fell" officials, workers and neighbors were at his house to see what they could do.

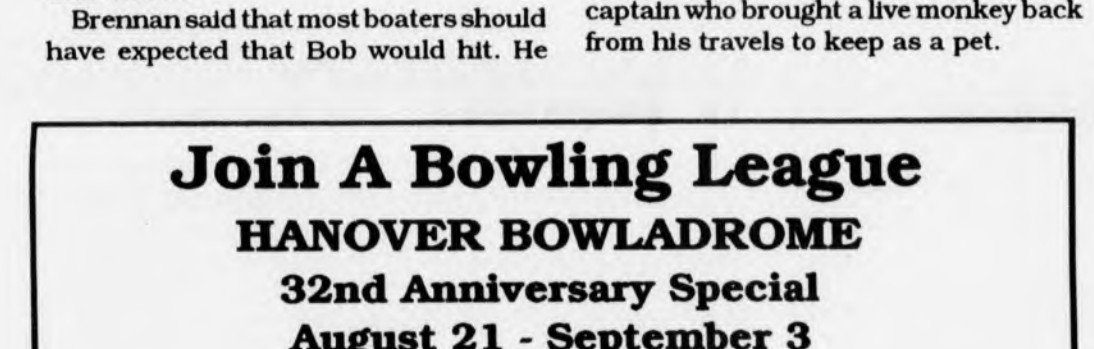
Seavey said Tree and Park Supt. Peter Laugelle told him that what was left standing of the tree was probably rotted and should be cut down. Although he said he respects Laugelle's opinion, he may seek a second opinion from a tree surgeon to save what is left of the tree.

"It is like operating on a child," he said.

Power in most of the 2,700 homes serviced by Eastern Edison in Cohasset was still out most of the day Tuesday as crews struggled to clear streets. Many of the businesses in Cohasset Center remained open despite the blackout. The post office operated by candlelight.

Not everyone feared the storm; for some the hurricane unleashed the daredevil within them.

Two kayakers in search of excitement during the storm said they were disappointed Bob didn't provide them bigger thrills.



"The winds have shifted now, whereas before they were coming in on us," said Stephen James of Brighton. "I'm surprised the extent of the damage doesn't seem to be bad. We've been out in bigger stuff than this."

He and Boston resident Steve Paulson said they were on their way to Sandy Beach, where they had seen the best surf of the day.

"We'll either be surfing the waves or bouncing off the rocks," James joked.

Film crew transforms Cohasset into Dobbs Mill

sleepy New England town Dobbs Mills.

Throughout Cohasset Center there were signs and window decorations to disguise the town's true identity.

Cohasset Hardware was adorned with a cedar facade to cover its second floor windows. A large wooden sign identifies the shop as Dobbs Mill Hardware.

An empty shop on Depot Court is now the Dobbs Mill general store and awnings were installed at Hunneman Realtors and Liquors Unlimited.

A fake Plymouth and Boston Bus stop was put up on the corner of Cohasset Common.

Park benches near the pond on the common were temporarily replaced because they were not rustic enough.

A sign in the center announced a fictitious lobster boil planned for Friday.

The tickets, which benefit the "Medi-Clinic," are $15 and can be purchased at Dobbs Mill Drugs.

To put the film into the right season, art crews diligently painted leaves and bushes orange and red, to pass for autumn foliage.

Director Frank Oz, the voice of several Muppet characters including Miss Piggy and Bert, has directed Martin in "Dirty Rotten Scoundrels" and "Little Shop of Horrors."

He said he picked Cohasset for its small-town charm.

"The town has been great," he told the Mariner between takes. He said Dobbs Mill "is meant to be an idyllic small town" and Cohasset, with its common, chapel and small shops fit the part.

He said the movie, budgeted at $20 million and filmed entirely in Massachusetts, will be shot in Cohasset, Boston, and Concord.

The house which serves as the movie's centerpiece was built in Concord; Cohasset was originally considered for the location.

Oz said his crew will return in late October to shoot additional scenes; he said the film is planned for a Summer 1992 release.

"After I finish shooting I'm going to edit the film at my home in Connecticut," Oz said. "After that I plan on some rest and 'r and r'." He said the final mix of the film will be done in New York.

Oz said there have been no limitations or problems with filming out of a traditional Hollywood environment. He said he lives in a small town himself, so Cohasset is a comfortable place to work.

He said making movies is hard work, and praised his crew for their efforts.

"We have been putting in 16-hour days," he said. "There is a lot of stuff that people do for me, and there are a lot of talented people around me to make me look good."

Several area residents had their "big break" Friday as extras.

Junior high students Bradley Potoliccio and Michael O'Hearn were paid $55 each for riding their bicycles as background action.

"We asked around yesterday (the day before the shoot) to see if they needed any extras and they told us to be here at 6:30 a.m.," Potolicchio said. He said they had to wait until after 8 a.m. before they knew they would be used.

O'Hearn said their job involved "riding our bikes back and forth about 50 times" and "waiting around."

Rose and Richard Christopher may have been the couple that travelled the farthest to be in the film. They hail from Hometown, Ill., Main Street to be exact.

They said their nephew, who has been involved with several local productions, arranged for the vacationing couple to have non-speaking roles.

They said they almost didn't make it; their car blew a tire on the way to the set and they thought they would be too late.

Chris Herbert, a graduate of Norwell High School who now lives in Scituate, was a fellow extra on the bus.

He said it was interesting to see how much work and preparation goes into filming even a small scene like the one he was in.

"They tell you to bring a couple of changes of clothing," the business suit-clad extra said.

He said he found it funny that the bus had two drivers for the scene. Local comedian Tony V. was the "forward" bus driver who appears on screen. A union driver had the responsibility of being the "reverse technician," he said.

When asked if he had any acting experience, Herbert smiled.

"I was a tree in my Aunt's children's theater workshop," he said.

As the Mariner went to press there was no official word on when filming would resume.

Off to the races

By Peter Kasperowicz
Special to the Mariner

Wednesday was the day. The Marshfield Fair was going to open, and I was going to the racetrack with Dick Straley.

I always called him "Mr. Straley" when I was little. He scared me back then; always talking about something I couldn't understand and then giving me some free Cards and Shards candy just for listening.

But the older I get, the more I realize that he's one of those mentor-types who can teach you anything if you hang around long enough. Every time our families play cards together, Dick comes up with a new game, a new frustrating game that only he can win. I guess he has to pay for all that free candy somehow.

Wednesday, I was going to the track with the Gambler.

He picked me up a little late after dealing with the location manager of "Housesitters" on the phone. "You can't let these guys push you around, Speedy," he said to me on 3A. Spoken like a true gambler; he'll call your bluff if you're not careful.

"Always count your cash. These horses are the worst of the worst down here, and the sharp turns really hurt their legs, he said with one eye on the road and the other, what else, counting his cash. "Horses' front legs are only as tall as our legs, you know."

Twenty minutes later we were hustling up the road towards the track after parking in Dick's secret parking lot. "We just saved two to five dollars, Speedy."

And then, there it was. The track. I followed Dick awkwardly through the crowd like a kid being led to the principal's office. Meanwhile, Dick was at his family reunion, saying hello to nearly everyone.

First we met "The Anonymous Man," who supplied Dick with some hot tips. Dick wrote them down quietly as the Anonymous Man turned to me and smiled, "The trick is, you have to think like a crook."

We had our racing forms and a $1 tip sheet, and so we entered the large, sweaty barn that had about 200 betting windows. TV screens with odds on each horse stared back from every direction, and Dick began explaining his new game to me.

"The odds on each horse change depending on how many bets are placed on him." In other words, if the odds on a horse are 40 to 1, nobody is betting on him.

"You can try for the Daily Double or the Perfecta if you want." The Daily Double means you're betting on the winners of the first two races—pretty tough. The Perfecta consists of the first and second horses in any one race. But don't say "first, second and third;" say "win, place and show." If you don't say it right, people just shake their heads at you.

So now it's easy. The racing form gives you tips, and you have a tip sheet, so you just take your best guess. I started circling numbers and looking at the odds when Dick motioned me. "C'mon, Speedy, let's go look at the horses." Lesson number two.

The stables. Eight horses parading around, trying to look good for the thousands of people with money. Not very often I lend money to a person I just met a minute ago, but it's different at the stables. "First Rate Fun," a man reads. "He looks good. Let's put $10 on him."

The short, skinny jockeys look like Munchkins in their bright riding jackets, and soon every Munchkin gets on a horse and rides out to the track. Post time is in 10 minutes, so we have to bet soon. I turn to the Gambler.

"I like Sparky's Diamonds, number 8," Dick says. "He's got a good look, good equipment—including a shadow roll across the nose so he won't see shadows coming at him—and plus he's grey and spotted, which means he's probably got some Arabian blood in him." Just like he told me, everybody's got a system.

We each put $1 on Sparky's Diamonds to cover the $2 minimum, and while Dick goes to the window I notice that the odds on our horse are 21 to 1. Neither the tip sheet nor the programs picked our horse, and apparently none of the bettors did either.

I figure, if number 8 wins, we split $42, plus our $2 bet back. Pretty good. I'll trust the Gambler.

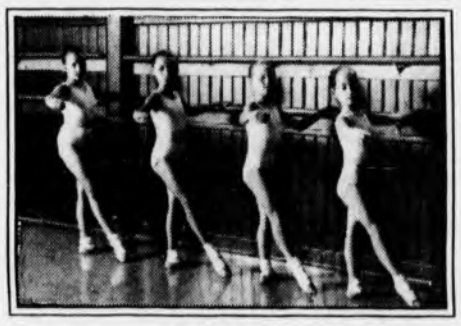
Number 8 runs a dead last, and suddenly I'm one of those guys who's ripping his ticket up in disgust, yelling "Ah, c'mon Spah-kee!" It was already addicting.

We hit the Perfecta in the second race, splitting $10.40 on a $2 bet, but even the program called that race. One race saw two longshots win and place, and the Perfecta payoff was over $500.

And the hot day passed. I played a hunch in the fourth race and won another $6.40, but that was the last time I was ahead. I came close to the big money twice, once for $50 and once for $150, which is exciting to me but to noone else. It's like fishing. "I swear it was this big, but then it slipped away..." Everybody almost wins.

Meanwhile, the Gambler made the rounds to the stables, the odds board and the betting windows before every race. The humidity had soaked through everybody's shirt except Dick's, and he didn't sit once all afternoon. "You gotta be patient, Speedy...," he said, then turned to the jockeys as they rode by. "C'mon Charlie, you're our man! Looking good Henry! This one's all yours, Miguel..."

We were very patient, but by the last race, we needed a win. The Anonymous Man told us that "Mi Chic Suave" was the sure winner. A friend of the Anonymous Man told us, "I talked to Carlos (the jockey), and he said that Chico is the definite winner."

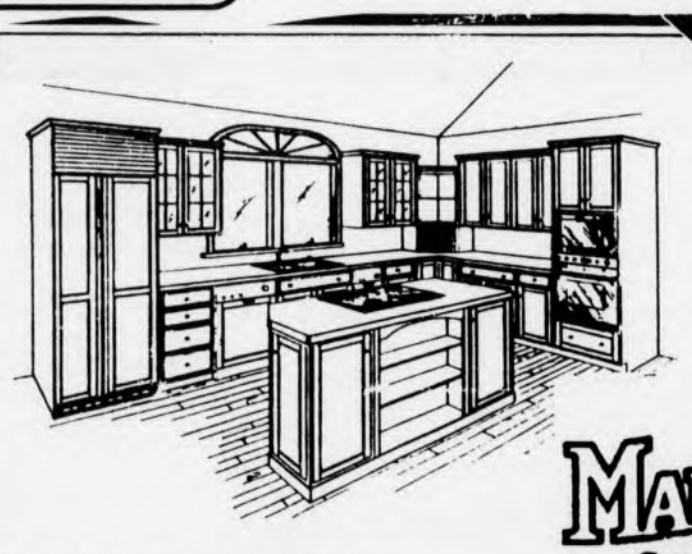


We had heard that before, so we made one last journey to the stables. "It's all in the rider. Who seems the most confident, Speedy?" We agreed that Chico's jockey seemed confident enough, given the strong endorsement by two large sweaty men who refused to give their names.

So, after placing about $8 on Chico to win and some other horses to place, we went out to watch.

"Nobody wins all the time. It's impossible. You should never bring more money than you're prepared to lose, otherwise you'll be broke."

Win or lose, the Gambler would be back. We lost too much money that Wednesday, and besides, Dick has an arrangement with his wife Sue: when the horses come to town, Dick doesn't work at Cards and Shards. Plus, his birthday is the 26th of August, so how can Sue say no?



By the way, we almost hit a $29 Perfecta in that last race. "You gotta be patient, Speedy..."

Slow Drains?

You'll never have a slow running, or clogged drain again!

The secret? Clean drains don't run slow. The "slows", or periodic clogs, are signals that a thick layer of "gook" is choking your pipes. This gook coats the entire length of your pipe-from sink to sewer, or septic.

Conventional drain openers cannot remove this build up. Even a small tunnel through the waste lets them flow through the pipe, leaving the gook behind!

Now, with just a few minutes each month, you can easily clean out your pipes like new... and KEEP them clean with Plumb Clean®. It clings, and penetrates deep into the gook. No other product has the Plumb Clean® formula. That is what allows it to liquefy even years of build up. Plumb Clean® will clean the entire length of your pipes. It will make your drains run like new, when used as directed. This penetrating action is so revolutionary, Plumb Clean® is money-back guaranteed! Don't be confused. Plumb Clean® is the brand with the guarantee right on the label.

Save Money. A 1 lb. jar of Plumb Clean® holds up to 41 drain treatments. It costs only about 35¢ per treatment.

Independent laboratory studies show Plumb Clean® more effectively breaks down organic waste than all other products tested. So, if your drains have the "slows", get safe, guaranteed Plumb Clean® today!

Benefit golf tourney Sept. 13

A hole-in-one will earn $10,000 at the Ralph W. Bucknam Memorial Golf Tournament, Sept. 13, a benefit being staged by the South Shore Unit of the American Cancer Society at the Braintree Municipal Golf Course.

This prize for an ace at a selected hole tops the goodies for competitors who will also enjoy prizes, green fees, golf carts and a roast beef dinner as a reward for helping the Cancer Society support its program of education and services to cancer patients in the South Shore communities of Braintree, Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Milton, Norwell, Quincy, Scituate and Weymouth.

Teams of five golfers will tee off at a 9 a.m. "shotgun" start and compete under the Florida system of scoring. Participation will be limited to the first 36 teams paid and registered, with payment of the $75 fee due by September 3. For information call the American Cancer Society, 617-341-4210.

The tournament is the first to be run by the Cancer Society in this area, although the Society benefited from the proceeds of a tournament organized by Webb's Pro Fitness, Norwell, in memory of the late Richard W. Barry, a well-known Quincy attorney. The tournament this year honors the memory of the late Ralph W. Bucknam, a long-time Braintree resident prominent in civic and community affairs.

Ken Kirkland of Abington, a principal of the Pembroke accounting firm of Kirkland-Albkneckt, heads the committee on arrangements, assisted by Jerry Kenny, Hanover; Phil Devin, Braintree; John Kirkland of the Braintree Electric Department; Kevin Kirkland of the Braintree Fire Department; Nancy Bucknam and Angie Matterazzo of United Supply Co.; and Barbara Sullivan, Braintree, president of the South Shore Unit, and Rose DiPietro, Quincy, vice president of the Unit.

CRC presents 'Pro-Play'

The Cohasset Recreation Commission began it's registrations during late July, for Pro-Play, a program for children aged 4 through 7. Pro-Play is specifically designed to teach and re-enforce movement and motor skills to young children and will meet daily, 1 and 1/2 hours per day, the week of Monday through Friday, August 26-30, 1991, at the Osgood School Field.

Children will be grouped into classes: ages 4 and 5, 8:30 to 10 a.m. and ages 6 and 7, 10:30 a.m. to noon. Pro-Play will be co-directed by Cliff Olsson and John Tate of Great Britain, who are teachers and coaches in both Great Britain and the U.S.A. Pro-Play has been developed to expose children to a variety of physical and social skills including balance, timing, coordination, health and fitness and imagination.

To register for this opportunity, please call the Cohasset Recreation Department office at 383-6791. Non-residents will be accepted for this program on a space available basis.

Junior Girl Scouts hold first meeting

Junior Girl Scout Troop #4339 and Cadette Girl Scout Troop #4300 will hold their first meeting on Friday, Sept. 6, 1991 at 7 p.m. in Room #2 at the Second Congregational Church on Highland Avenue.

Their meeting will be hosted by Angela Walsh, representative of Mary Kay Cosmetics. All mothers and daughters will learn about skin care, what colors are right for you, nutrition, etc. For more information call Georgine Butman at 383-2528.

Pre-school holds open house Sept. 12

The arts based pre-school of the South Shore Conservatory in Hingham will hold an open house Thurs., Sept. 12 from 10 to 11:30 a.m. The pre-school is located in the Conservatory's main building, located off 19 Fort Hill St. on the grounds of the former Naval Depot.

Other events include Conservatory faculty demonstrating musical instruments, the Creative Dramatics director playing theater games or the Conservatory's dance director leading a noisy romp.

Sound socialization skills, self-esteem and independence are the goals of the program. They are achieved through participation in the arts as well as traditional pre-school activities like manipulative structures, cooking activities, block building, water and play, woodworking, language arts and physical education.

"One of my favorite events is our Conservatory Spring Tea when the children come to school dressed formally, prepare tea sandwiches and lemonade, demonstrate their best manners and enjoy tea-time snack complete with live chamber music!" added Scheig.

The Conservatory Pre-School offers a two- or three-day program. First Time Playschool is also offered for children three and over who have not yet been to nursery school.

Openings for some fall programs are still available. For further information regarding programs or open house, call 749-4014.

Hurricane Bob blew $10,000 from town coffers

By Alison Cohen
Mariner correspondent

Selectmen Chairman Ned Tebbetts offered kudos to town employees for their exemplary service during the reign of Hurricane Bob and the cleanup efforts in his wake. Eastern Edison did not fare so well.

Tebbetts also emphasized that selectmen did not order a shutoff of electric service despite reports on talk radio shows to the contrary.

Selectmen also learned that it has cost the town an estimated $10,000 for unplanned overtime and other expenses to clean up in Bob's wake. The town has applied for federal reimbursement, but there is no guarantee the money will be forthcoming.

Tebbetts asked Executive Secretary Greg Doyon to arrange to have a representative from Eastern Edison come to the Sept. 10 selectmen's meeting to answer questions posed by selectmen and residents about the slow reconnection process.

"I want to invite certain people who expressed strong opinions over the phone," he said. "It's helpful to get these things out in the open."

Tebbetts said he was reviewing information supplied by Margaret Lynch of the state Department of Public Utilities. He is trying to determine whether Eastern Edison lived up to promises made in a long hearing in the aftermath of Hurricane Gloria.

Selectman Jane Goedecke endorsed the idea of a public hearing, particularly one held after a cooling-off period.

"The major thing I saw was a high degree of frustration, then depression set in," she said. "Several people who called started out upset. They needed someone to listen to them be angry. I'm glad we'll have the perspective of a couple of weeks before the hearing."

Bob may be history, but Cohasset department heads plan to use the experience to plan for the next storm. Doyon said department heads have a debriefing and planning meeting scheduled.

High on the agenda is improved communications for town hall. Although town hall has an emergency line, it did not always ring and many residents were unaware it existed.

Cohasset will SHARE

By Alison Cohen
Mariner correspondent

Selectmen threw their support behind SHARE and opened the doors of town hall to the nationwide community service and food program.

SHARE, or Self-Help and Resource Exchange, offers participants food packages worth two to three times the asking price. The only "catch" is that participants must perform two hours community service at some point during the month for each food package provided by the private, non-profit organization.

SHARE expanded into New England in the spring. Participation has grown by leaps and bounds. Cohasset will join the list of South Shore communities with SHARE programs in September.

Judy Dwyer of the Social Service League and Kathy Bryanton of the Council on Aging, the local sponsoring agencies for the program, approached selectmen for permission to distribute the food packages from town hall on the last Saturday of each month.

"People here certainly know the value of a dollar."

Judy Dwyer
Social Service League

Dwyer described the program as a runaway success nationwide. Participants pay $13 and contribute two hours of volunteer work for a package of food. The value of the package ranges from $35 to $45. There is no limit on the number of packages a household can sign up to receive.

"The quality of the food is quite remarkable," Dwyer said. "And it is certainly a wise investment in these times."

Participation is open to households regardless of income. The program's motto is "If you eat, you qualify."

"This is not a food hand-out," Dwyer said. "We want to try to remove the impression that it is only for low income families and remove the stigma.

"People here certainly know the value of a dollar."

Dwyer expects to match Duxbury's experience with the program. Duxbury started a SHARE program two months ago with 75 orders. Although Cohasset won't have its own program until September, it won't be the first time for many Cohasset households.

"A very large contingent are already

It is once again time to break out the new sneakers and lunch boxes; the first day of school is upon us once again. Cohasset schools begin classes on Thursday, Sept. 5. Shaggy dog story involves South Shore

By Todd R. Wallack
Mariner news intern

Everyone in the Reardon household in Cohasset takes a summer vacation — even the dog.

Fluffernutter, or "Fluffy" for short, recently journeyed around the South Shore for five weeks before finding its way back home.

Cohasset resident Susie Reardon, 47, knew something had gone awry during her Fourth of July excursion when she returned to find her Red Gate Lane home eerily quiet. Usually her dog, a 12-year-old mutt, would greet her enthusiastically at the door.

Although the chow/Labrador mix was free to roam, Reardon said it had never before strayed.

FIREWORKS

But that night, an unusually loud fireworks display frightened the dog. Scared and alone, Fluffy fled.

When Fluffy was still missing the next morning, Reardon asked friends in the area to keep an eye out for her pet. She also checked with dog officers in both Cohasset and nearby Hingham, but with no luck.

Her four children were devastated when they heard the news.

Christen, 5, couldn't believe Fluffy would leave, Reardon said.

The dog — described by Reardon as "short, stout, sandy and long-haired with a fan tail" was the runt of its litter. But, Reardon said, the puppy grew up to become "the most fantastic dog in the world."

The unchained dog had a 3/4-mile regimen it followed each day.

An avid swimmer, Fluffy often stopped en route to take a dip in a nearby pond. The next stop was a visit to Reardon's children at the town swimming pool. If a baseball game was on, Fluffy would check out the action.

"She has a tremendous sense of direction," Reardon said.

While she enjoyed sleeping under the flowering rhododendrons in the garden, Fluffy would also join family members on errands. She was even invited to family

Special town meeting set

Selectmen scheduled a special town meeting for Oct. 7. Selectmen opened the warrant for submission of articles August 26. It closes Sept. 3.

Selectmen opted to hold special town meeting as soon as possible to reduce the amount of money the town must borrow in anticipation of tax revenues. Scheduling the meeting Oct. 21 would have forced the town to borrow an additional $4,000 according to Executive Secretary Greg Doyon.

Doyon said the primary reason for calling the meeting is a shortfall of $100,000 in revenue due to a reduction in local aid. Voters can allocate money from free cash to rebalance the budget.

Doyon expects voters will be asked to take action on 15 articles.

"There are already a number of housekeeping articles," Doyon said. Action on a plan to defer teachers' summer salaries from the current fiscal year to the following year is included among them. Doyon also anticipates several citizen petitions will be submitted before the warrant closes.

Selectman Jane Goedecke reminded citizens only articles dealing with emergency articles are considered at special town meetings. All other matters must wait for annual town meeting, she said.

Housesitter moves out

Executive Secretary Greg Doyon reported the cast and crew of Housesitter has packed up and left town.

"They are scheduled to come back in October," Doyon said. "I don't know if it's true Steve Martin will be in town in October. I heard he would be chasing the bus down the street."

Three named to C.O.A.

Selectmen appointed Austin O'Toole of 13 Haystack Lane to the board of the town's Council on Aging. O'Toole replaces Lillian Lincoln. Margaret Casey and T. Gerard Keating were reappointed. The council acts as a planning, service delivery and needs assessment program for Cohasset senior citizens.

What's open, what's not

Labor Day will be observed Monday, Sept. 2.

The Mariner offices will be closed that day. Display advertising deadlines for South Look will be Thursday, Aug.ust 29 at 5 p.m. The deadline for classified advertising will be Saturday, Aug.ust 31 at noon. All Mariner papers will follow their normal publication schedule.

In observance of Labor Day, most businesses will be closed, including manufacturing, retail stores and supermarkets. All banks will shut down for the day along with the stock market, state and municipal offices, schools and libraries.

There will be no mail delivery Sept. 2.

Liquor stores and taverns will remain open for the day.

SHARE comes to Cohasset

The Social Service League and The Council on Aging in Cohasset are working together to bring SHARE to Cohasset.

SHARE is a community program which encourages volunteer service in exchange for an opportunity to purchase approximately $40 worth of food for $13.

SHARE is for everyone! Anyone who volunteers two hours per month doing community, church, school, or any kind of service to others, qualifies. SHARE is NOT a government sponsored food program. It is intended for ALL income levels. It is entirely self-supporting. SHARE is wise financial management as well as an investment in community.

Cohasset's first food distribution day will be on Saturday, September 28. To join, voucher forms (which verify community service) can be picked up at any time from The Cohasset Senior Center or at the office of The Social Service League in St. Stephen's Church. Registration for the first food distribution date will be held at The Senior Center in the Community Center on Tuesday, September 10, from 10 a.m. to noon and on Wednesday, September 11, from 7 to 9 p.m. At that time members should bring their signed voucher forms and $13 for each food order they wish to purchase. Payment must be in cash.

If you would like to get involved but are not currently volunteering your time, we can connect you with an organization which can use your help.

SHARE needs strong volunteers to pick up food on the one Saturday morning a month when food is distributed. We also need the use of two trucks (3/4 or 1 ton) for food pick up.

Watch for more details in the next several weeks. For more information, call Judy Dwyer at 383-1654 or Kathy Bryanton at the Council on Aging at 383-9112.

If you appreciate the value of a dollar and enjoy helping others, SHARE is for you. We need you. Give us a call.

Mailmen want boxes moved post-haste

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

Neither rain nor sleet nor snow may keep a postman from his appointed rounds, but long driveways are another matter.

According to Cohasset postmaster James Hooley, about 600 residents, nearly one-fourth of the town, have been asked to move their mailboxes to the edge of the street.

Hooley said it costs one-third less to deliver mail directly to houses. He said if boxes are moved closer to the street mail delivery will be more efficient.

Hooley said the post office is also phasing out the small, maneuverable, jeep-like vehicles it currently uses in favor of larger more durable trucks.

He said the new trucks have a lifespan of 24 years; the smaller vehicles only last an average of eight years.

Hooley said if the mailboxes are not moved, the cost savings of the larger trucks could be negated. He explained that the new trucks are not very good navigating narrow driveways; backing up is also difficult and poses a safety problem.

Hooley said it would not be cost effective to have the driver walk up and down driveways.

Over the past few months Hooley has sent two letters to postal customers asking them to move their mailboxes.

Even though only about 6 percent of the town has complied with the request, Hooley said there was a "reasonable response" and that he was optimistic others will follow their example.

He said many residents have either contacted the post office for more information or discussed the change with their carrier.

Hooley said he will mail another letter in a few months and then assess how many homes still need to comply.

Homes that already have a street mailbox or whose mail is delivered by a foot carrier are not affected by the request.

He said the suggestion came from "the carriers themselves" at a meeting to discuss cost savings.

Five of Brockton's finest vie for Cohasset police opening

By Alison Cohen
Mariner correspondent

Five former Brockton police officers are vying for a slot on the Cohasset force. Selectmen interviewed the candidates Monday night. They plan to appoint one of them at the Sept. 10 meeting.

Candidates include Steven M. Loud, Andrew H. Cesarini, John W. Crowley, Lisa M. Matos and Thomas O. DaSilva.

Loud, 32, has 10 years experience. He served on the Brockton police force for four years before being laid off in April. He also served on the Brockton Park Police, the Brockton School Police and the Stonehill College campus police department..

The Brockton resident holds an associates degree in criminal justice from Massasoit College. He is working on a bachelors degree at Roger Williams College in Rhode Island.

Loud said he did not anticipate any difficulties switching from city police work to the slower pace of Cohasset.

"It's not like I'm a rookie just getting my feet wet," he said. "I don't need to have the action."

Loud said he particularly enjoyed working as a uniform cruiser patrol.

While on the Brockton force, Loud worked on the SWAT team and developed an interest in auto theft cases. He described drug activity in Brockton as virtually uncontrollable.

Loud is married to state trooper and has a son, 1 1/2. He expressed willingness to transfer closer to Cohasset if hired.

Cesarini, 28, also lives in Brockton. A four year veteran of the Brockton police department, h, too, was laid off in April.

Cesarini holds an associates degree in law enforcement from Massasoit College, and bachelors in criminal justice from Westfield State College and a masters degree in criminal justice from Anna Maria College in Paxton.

He told selectmen he decided to become a police officer because he could help people and do something for the community.

"It's a good way to contribute," he said. His father was a firefighter and he has relatives working as police officers.

While on the Brockton force Cesarini received FBI training as an evidence technician and worked on the special reaction team. As a member of the team he was trained to deal with crisis situations such as hostage takings.

Cesarini takes a hard line on drunk driving, particularly because his father was killed by a drunk driver. He added that he did not necessarily mean that drunk drivers should be put behind bars. He supports detoxification and alcohol education programs.

"It's a problem society has brought upon itself," he said. He referred to the impact advertising has on attitudes about drinking.

Cesarini said he had considerable experience dealing with domestic violence and child abuse cases. He described domestic violence calls as dangerous situations for police officers. His method of response was to try to defuse the situation by allowing the partners to vent their frustrations and work out their feelings.

Cesarini had no reluctance about moving from city to small town police work.

"I'd love to live in a nice community like this," he said. "It would be a nice change of pace."

Ultimately, Cesarini hopes to attend law school.

Crowley,27, also lives in Brockton. He was just shy of 4 years service on the Brockton force when the April layoff came.

Crowley holds a bachelors in management from Bridgewater State College and a masters in criminal justice from Anna Maria College.

One of seven children, Crowley took the exam for the police force on a whim. He did extremely well and accepted a position on the Brockton force. He said he never regretted the decision.

While on the Brockton force, he particularly enjoyed his assignment as court prosecutor.

"I was fascinated by that," he said.

When asked where he hoped to be five or 10 years from now, Crowley responded, "Hopefully I'll have made rank. Maybe I'll give law school a shot."

Like his former colleagues, Crowley didn't think the adjustment from Brockton to Cohasset would be a problem.

"There's probably not too much difference," he said. "Just less of it. There's no way you're going to escape it."

Crowley, who plans to marry in six weeks, said he would relocate closer if hired.

"There's no quick way to commute between here and Brockton," he said.

Matos, 27, joined the Brockton force 5 1/2 years ago with the encouragement of her father. Although he was a career firefighter, he always wanted to be a police officer. Matos is happy with her career.

"Now I can't imagine what else I could be doing," she said.

While on the Brockton force, Matos has worked on the vice squad and as on undercover drug investigations. She would welcome the slower pace of police work in Cohasset

"It's been a great learning experience," she said. "It exposed me to things I never dreamed existed. I'm glad I was exposed to them, but I don't think I would miss it. We just make arrests, there's no time for follow up."

Matos said she had considerable experience working with domestic violence calls. Her approach is to separate the couple and interview them individually, then take the necessary steps.

"It's a lot of counseling, a lot of social work," Matos said. "The victim can be a woman, a man or it can involve a homosexual couple."

A resident of East Bridgewater, Matos is currently pursuing a bachelors degree in law enforcement at Western New England College in Springfield.

DaSilva, 31, was just shy of five years on the Brockton force when he was laid off in April.

"Police work appeals to me," he told selectmen. "I planned on a career in it. It doesn't allow you time to get stagnant. Boredom doesn't creep in."

DaSilva's interest in police work started early. His father retired after a 32-year career, an uncle retired from the force and another uncle has five years to retirement age.

When asked where he wants to be in five to 10 years, DaSilva answered without hesitation, "Chief of Cohasset if I"m not aiming too high."

DaSilva anticipates no problems leaving city police work for Cohasset.

PSO welcomes Charren

Fall meeting date, September 19, 1991. Refreshments, 7 p.m., guest speaker, 8 p.m.

Guest speaker is Peggy Charren of Action for Children's Television (ACT). As president of ACT, a lobbying group she founded 23 years ago with three friends, Charren has been fighting for quality television programming for children since 1968. ACT is largely responsible for "The Children's Television Act of 1990" which compels broadcasters to offer educational and informational programming for children as a condition for license renewal. It also places restrictions on television advertising.

Charren is a dynamic speaker and highly respected in her field. She is knowledgeable and promises to offer advice and information on the topic of TV and children—What it is doing, what it could be doing and what we should do about it. It promises to be an interesting evening. Please join us on Thursday, September 19, at Cohasset High School.

SAFE seeks CHL hearings

SAFE today urged the Board of Health to vote to reopen the Site Assignment hearings on the Cohasset Heights Ltd. landfill.

"These hearings are essential," said Alix White, SAFE President, "to allow the Board of Health to more effectively regulate the Cohasset Heights Landfill."

At their September 10 meeting, from 8 to 9 p.m., the Board of Health will be discussing this issue with SAFE.

"We urge Cohasset residents to attend this meeting and to support our request to reopen the hearing," said White.

"There are a number of key issues which need to be addressed in the Site Assignment hearings," said John McNabb, Jr., SAFE Vice-President.

"CHL must be required to pay the costs of 30 years of leachate removal and disposal after the landfill closes down," said McNabb, "so the taxpayers of Cohasset won't be stuck with the bill."

"Every truck entering CHL must be weighed using the scale located there," said McNabb, "since the Town gets $1.89 for every ton of debris disposed of at CHL. Right now, some BFI trucks that are reportedly too big for the scale are allowed to go around it."

"More extensive monitoring of the contamination of surface and ground waters, and neighboring wetlands, must be done to fully document the impact of the landfill on Lily Pond," said McNabb.

To all Eastern Edison customers: Thank you for understanding

When Hurricane Bob hurled itself through our area on Monday August 19th, it left in its wake nearly 50% of our customers without electric service.

The monumental task of pulling our distribution system back together has been accomplished through the efforts of many people, which include the crews working in the field and office support staff.

While we are trained to respond to storm emergencies, the support and assistance of the people in the communities we serve make the task easier.

We wish to thank all our customers for their patience and understanding as we repaired the lines damaged by Hurricane Bob. We also want to express our gratitude to all police, fire, media and public officials who contributed their cooperation and support during the storm restoration efforts.

Sincerely,

Cohasset will SHARE

participating in Scituate," Dwyer said. The Scituate program has grown so rapidly they are anxious to transfer the Cohasset households to the Social Service League/Council on Aging program.

Although the content of the food packages varies from month to month, SHARE says a typical food package contains:

- 5 lbs chicken parts
- 1 lb ground beef or turkey
- 1 lb fish sticks
- 1 lb pork sausage
- 1 bunch celery
- 3 cucumbers
- 1 head lettuce
- 2 lbs onions
- 4 1/2 lbs potatoes
- 1 lb tomatoes
- 5 lbs apples
- 2 lbs oranges
- 1 cantaloupe
- 1 lb pinto beans
- 1 lb spaghetti
- 1 package frozen vegetables
- 1 can fruit
- 1 package butter or margarine

Households can share a package and individuals may donate their package to someone else.

Dwyer invited selectmen to participate in the program.

As important as providing high quality food at rock-bottom prices is building a solid volunteer network. Dwyer stressed that the definition of community service is broad. Although some households may choose to volunteer their time with a well-established charitable organizations, others can fulfill their obligation by assisting an elderly homeowner with Hurricane Bob cleanup chores or drive a cancer patient to chemotherapy.

"There are any number of opportunities here for the town as well," Dwyer added. "Volunteers can be of service to their community through assisting with town needs."

SHARE-New England organizer Carolyn Vaughan said SHARE participants rave about the community service component.

"It's really bringing communities together," she said. "One coordinator said bagging week at the SHARE warehouse is like a '90s version of an old-fashioned quilting bee.'

SHARE began in San Diego in 1983. In the eight years since its inception, it gradually worked its way eastward.

SHARE can offer food at low cost because they purchase food in bulk through a central purchasing unit in San Diego. Regional buyers are located in San Diego, Chicago and Philadelphia.

Before New England came on board in April, SHARE distributed 12 million pounds of food to 19 affiliates. The program expands on a daily basis.

The SHARE-New England distribution center is a 40,00 square-foot facility located in Canton.

Vaughan said the South Shore response to SHARE has been phenomenal. The program started in April with 30 host organizations in communities within a 30-mile radius of Boston. They delivered 2,200 packages of food in April. By the end of June, more than 75 organizations were participating and 5,500 packages were delivered.

More than 20 groups are committed to coming on board in the coming months and an equal number are exploring the program.

The Cohasset program will hold registration for the September distribution on Sept. 10 from 10 a.m. to noon and Sept. 11 from 7 to 9 p.m. Both registration dates will be held at the Senior Center offices in the Community Center across from the town common.

Food packages will be distributed Sept. 28 at town hall. Tentative hours are 8-11 a.m. For additional information, call the Social Service League at 383-082 or the Council on Aging at 383-9112.

Peter Slovenski, head coach of men's and women's track and cross country at Bowdoin College, directed the camp.

❑ The University of Vermont will be receiving one of Cohasset's finest young ladies this fall...Amy E. Russell. Amy, who graduated from Noble and Greenough School on June 5, achieved High Distinction on the fourth quarter honor roll. Amy is the daughter of Michael and Jane Russell of Atlantic Avenue, and we all think that the University of Vermont is lucky to get her! Best of Luck in your college career, Amy.

❑ Stonehill College awaits the return of Frank Willshire of 240 Fair Oaks Lane! Frank, who begins his sophomore year, was named to the Dean's List with honors for the last semester. Keep up the good work, Frank.

❑ We recently heard from the University of Mass at Amherst that two Cohasset gals graduated last spring, Maria J. Cahill of 24 Buttonwood Lane who earned a Bachelor of Science, and Nicole Christina Gamst of 73 Forest Ave., who earned herself a Bachelor of Arts Degree. Here's hoping that both of you have good luck in the job market, its a rough time out there!!

❑ D. Ross MacLeod begins his senior year at Boston College High School on a grand note, he was named to the fourth term honor roll at that school. Keep up the hard work!

❑ Robert Leggat, son of Richard and Patricia Leggat, and a Dartmouth College Junior, is studying French in Blois, France this winter as part of the college's foreign study program there. Dartmouth's off-campus programs are designed to expand the college's curriculum into new areas of academic and cultural understanding. Through these programs, students are given the chance to study a particular topic in depth. Dartmouth's off-campus offerings include 41 programs in 15 countries and the United States.

❑ Deborah Marie Hartley, a senior majoring in political science at the University of Rochester, has been named to the Dean's List for academic achievement. The University is located in Rochester, New York.

❑ Congratulations to Jim D'Ercole, who was selected in the College of Wooster's Lacrosse Program. It states that after an early switch to midfield, Jim moved back to defense. He is a rugged player whose quick feet enabled him to become the Scots' fourth defenseman last season. With continued improvement of his stick-handling skills he could move into Geoff Belz's defense position. In high school he earned three letters in lacrosse and was an all-league selection.

❑ Three Cohassetites that are students at Thayer Academy's Upper School made the final term honor roll last spring. They are Miss Robin L. DeVito, class of '93, Miss Jessica Klein, class of '92 and Mr. Stephen R. Izzo, class of '93. By the way, Stephen earned himself High Honors!!

❑ News from Bowdoin College Sports department tells us that Todd A. Fitzpatrick, class of '92 earned junior varsity numerals in Hockey; Holly N. Pompeo, also class of '92, also earned Varsity Numerals in Basketball as manager.

These Cohasset girls participated in the district soccer- Under 13 Olympic Development program for the Mass. Youth Soccer Association this summer. (L-R) Danielle Nohe, Andrea Freidman, Amie Theriault, Katie Cambell and Tammy Maitland.

❑ Congratulations go to Priscilla and Ed Daniels, who recently celebrated their 40th wedding anniversary on August 4. Stephen and Susan, Scott and Peggy and Kim and Jim all got together at Scott's house for a lobster feast. We hear that a wonderful time was had by all.

❑ Congratulations go to Amy Lincoln, who was placed on the Russell Sage College Dean's List. Amy, who will graduate in 1993, is a Sociology major. She is the daughter of Carol Flaherty and John Lincoln.

❑ The Cohasset Community Center is now holding registration for all Fall Classes. Brochures detailing the classes are late coming back from the printers, but there is a computer print-out of all classes available at the office. Classes start September 9, and you can register any day between 9 and 2 at the office. We do know of one exciting class that will be available. The Future Kids program, for ages 3 through adult, that will teach all about computers. The classes will be held in the Community Center Annex, the building that used to house the post office and most recently was rehabilitated for the movie, "Housesitter." It's unbelievable that a three-year-old can learn about computers, but in this day and age it is a must...

❑ That's the news for this week. Good luck to all of the athletes and coaches that begin their fall sports this week. Here's hoping the weather isn't too hot for those double sessions!!

Hurricane Bob leads to alert for killer mosquitos

By David McKee
Mariner staff

In addition to knocking down trees and wiping out power for many area residents, Hurricane Bob also ushered in an increased threat of the deadly Eastern (Equine) Encephalitis virus, which is transmitted by mosquitos.

The buildup of standing water from the storms torrential rains, is the ideal breeding grounds for mosquitos carrying the deadly virus, according to state health officials.

Last weekend state health and environmental officials sprayed 12 communities in Middlesex, Worcester and Norfolk counties which received more than two inches of rain and have a history of past EEE infections with with BTI, Bacillus Thuringiensis Israelensis.

BTI is an organic agent that kills mosquito larvae but is harmless to humans, mammals and most other insects.

The South Shore, which also received heavy rainfall from Hurricane Bob, was not treated with BTI. However state officials said the South Shore is still being carefully monitored and residents should not take the threat from mosquitos lightly.

"People on the South Shore should still take precaution because they are in a high-risk area," said Kate McCormick, spokesman for the State Department of Health.

'SIGNIFICANT IMPACT'

"The heavy rain did create a significant impact and we are making sure things are safe."

McCormick said that while no humans in the state have been infected with the virus this year, the threat will continue until the first frost.

"There's no cause for alarm," McCormick said. "But it is still important that people take precautions such as wearing long sleeves and using mosquito repellant. If people are aware of the dangers of the virus than they will be better prepared."

Over the weekend, BTI was applied to approximately 10,000 acres of standing water as part of the state $2.2 million mosquito control plan.

The plan calls for the use of larvacide, such as BTI, wherever possible to kill mosquitos in the larval stage so that aerial applications of pesticides, such as malathion, can be avoided, according to state officials.

The EEE virus has no cure and is usually fatal.

The symptoms of the virus are a high fever, stiff neck, headache and a lack of energy. These symptoms show up two to ten days after infection. Swelling of the brain, called encephalitis, is the most dangerous symptom. The disease gets worse quickly and many patients go into a coma within a week, according to state health officials.

In early August mosquitos carrying EEE were found in Carver, Wareham and Westboro.

Two horses contracted the disease at that time and later died, according to McCormick.

Since the beginning of the summer, the state has been carefully monitoring all regions in the state for mosquitos carrying EEE.

TRAPPING SITES

More than 20 trapping sites in eastern Massachusetts, including spots in Hanover, Halifax, Canton and Brockton, have been examined on a weekly basis for contaminated mosquitos.

Last year a Kingston man died from being infected with the EEE virus and a Marshfield boy was also infected but survived.

Time for summer's last hurrah

"Steep thy self in a bowl of summer time," the Roman poet Virgil advised.

During this summer of discontent we were lucky to manage a dunking in that elusive bowl.

It's hard to enjoy a good soak when you suspect that while your back is turned you're being taken to the cleaners.

Try as we might, the elation that comes with Memorial Day, and its promise of a vacation from everyday worries, couldn't hold up for long during the summer of '91. With the Commonwealth of Massachusetts still mired in recession — and it's cold comfort to acknowledge that sad state of affairs afflicts most other states — escaping from harsh reality required a lot of effort.

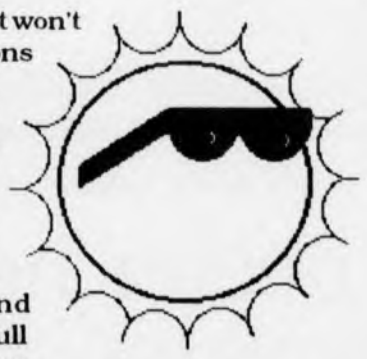
Even the euphoria brought on by the successful conclusion of the Persian Gulf War soon dissipated

Certainly, our town officials got little respite this July and August. The arrival of summer did nothing to solve the horrendous fiscal problems facing Cohasset and its neighbors.

The state budget, when it was finally passed, hurt more than helped, dashing us with another blast of cold water.

State aid, the lifeline of most communities in the decade of Proposition 2 1/2, is going down — again.

School officials have struggled throughout these unsummerlike weeks to cope with the need for more and dire cuts.



No, we can't get away from money problems, even though the calendar tells us this is vacation time, and the sun has graced so many of our days.

You might say, the unexpected visit last week by Hurricane Bob symbolizes this ersatz summer. The winds of Bob wrecked more havoc, adding to our fiscal woes, just as we trying to escape for a few more weeks.

Ironic too, isn't it, that Bob coincided with the collapse of the Communist world even as the 75th anniversary of the Russian revolution approaches.

And mired somewhere in the miasma of this peculiar summer is any awareness that a Presidential election year almost upon us. Unthinkable — however you want to look at it.

Perhaps that's how we've managed to deal with our bowl of summertime. While it's been impossible to steep in forgetfulness, we could manage a dunk two.

But the problems just won't go away. The decisions still must be made.

Labor Day weekend has traditionally marked the end of summer in New England. In the wake of its arrival, school reopens, clubs and organizations start up full Yet even as a new , a new year of possibilities, rapidly approaches, we still have a few days left for summer's last hurrah.

Enjoy.

Politics is everybody's business

letters

To the Editor:

The scenes of hundreds of thousands of Russian citizens standing up—successfully—to tanks and guns is a useful object lesson for Americans.

In America today, issues are seldom as clear cut as they were for the Russians—who were confronted with a repressive coup that threatened to destroy their newly won freedoms.

However, there are key political issues confronting America today, issues which materially affect our standard of living, our quality of life, and our personal freedoms.

Our society can be reinvigorated, as was Soviet society, if we realize, as they have, that politics is too important to leave to the politicians, that it is everybody's business.

In the Soviet Union for too long, those who stood up to be counted were usually met with bullets rather than debate. Yet, the Soviets have recently learned that if they speak up, their voice will be heard.

In the U.S., where bullets are not a usual part of political discourse, wouldn't we all be just a bit better off if more of us spoke up for what we believed in, and if more of us stood up to be counted.?

Letting those who can do, teach

commentary

The nights are crisper. The fringes of the maple leaves are beginning to turn. The tang of wood dust and graphite from sharpened No. 2's fills the air.

The squeak of new running shoes and the whoosh of new corduroys are heard in the land.

The new school year is a time for optimism. With clean slates and good intentions we start anew.

Unfortunately the public school system in this country is troubled. A small, but not insignificant marker of this is the recent announcement about the continued slide in SAT scores.

Ironically, as salaries for teachers at long last approach respectability, the decline in student achievement continues.

In all professions there are three ranges of ability. The superior, the competent and finally those that just punch the clock. Teaching is no different. The strata of incompetent or disinterested teachers makes mediocrity of performance acceptable for students.

In a recessionary environment with so many gifted people seeking employment, in many fields, the teaching profession is a closed shop.

Should not the criteria for such an important profession be no less than any other? Knowledge, competence and the ability to teach should hold the keys to academia.

This is not a polemic against the teachers' unions. Nor is it an argument against standardized performance measures. It is an argument against the small-minded bureaucracy whose only interest is self-perpetuation and not superior education.

There are people with advanced degrees in all disciplines who cannot teach in America's public schools, for want of education credits and a teaching certificate. If Socrates, the founder of western pedagogy, were alive today he could not teach in most American public schools. After all, he was trained as a stone cutter. He never took "Seating Chart 101."

There are physicists and computer engineers who could surely help the woeful state of science education. Unemployed but talented writers and social workers could enhance English and social studies. The possibilities are virtually endless.

Opening the teaching profession to this pool of gifted, albeit uncertified people would have a number of benefits. Most importantly fresh approaches and insights would come into the system.

Secondarily the over-represented administrators would earn their salaries by on-site certification of teaching ability and subject competence.

It is time for talent and excellence to reign in our schools, not gut education courses. We owe this to our children.

Is it not time that the old saw be changed? Instead of, Those that can, do. Those that can't teach, to Those that can do, teach.

K.T. Oslin turned in an inspirational set at Music Circus

An antique white wooden chair, a slenderly tapered night table, and a pair of elbow-length white silk gloves beneath the wholesome full moon were the only stage props K.T. Oslin needed to create a burlesque atmosphere that the South Shore Music Circus audience could cozy up to, Sunday evening, Aug. 25. Having been called "an inspiration to late bloomers everywhere," the sharp-witted, twangy "mouth" of country music, Oslin, kept her customers attention throughout a set spanning the course of her three albums with a sampling of things to come.

Her four-man band, dubbed "Live Bait" because of her "spending a lot of time on the bus, and I'm not going to be sitting around, looking at any ugly boys," comprised of bass and rhythm guitars, keyboard, saxophone, and drums, handled the productions of Oslin's versatility admirably.

The title cut from Oslin's debut album, "80's Ladies," which made country music history when it rose higher and faster on the charts than the debut work of any woman before her, drew the biggest ovation of the night. "We were the girls of the fifties / Stone rock and rollers of the sixties / And more than our names got changed / As the seventies slipped on by / Now we're eighties ladies / There ain't been much these ladies ain't tried."

The romantic ballad, "Mary and Willie," was about the empty lives of a pair of lovers who "never met, and probably wouldn't have liked each other if they had." The first song she ever wrote, "I Ain't Never Gonna Love Nobody But Cornell Crawford," was inspired by rest room graffiti at a cafe in South Carolina.

"By the time I was fourteen or fifteen years old," she said, "I knew I had some intangible thing that people connect with and like. I always thought that if I got the right shot, I could hit it really big." Oslin struggled for years to make it as an actress, making commercials for dentures and floor wax, among other products. "I wasn't pretty enough to be the Campbell's Soup mommy or funny-looking enough to be the Federal Express wierdo."

After singing jingles into her forties, she tried writing songs. "They were very definitely country," she said of her early work. "They just came out that way."

At one time, though, Oslin "hated" country music. "During the sixties, when it was all middle-aged men singing about drinking whiskey and cheating on their loyal wives, I didn't like the genre." Nowadays, she says, "I write songs the way I think women think today."

The hard-hitting "This Woman," with its deep, pounding beat, was a crowd-pleaser. It was this, the title cut from her second album, that established her as a writer.

Four-part backing vocals by the band helped out on "New Way Home," a song about having to find an alternate route to avoid the pain of passing by the house of an old girlfriend.

Oslin displayed some vocal hyperactivity during the singing of the spiced-up "Younger Men." "Women peak at forty / Men at nineteen / That's why younger men are starting to catch my eye / And the very next opportunity / I'm gonna give a younger man a try."

Oslin told the crowd that the woman in "Come Next Monday" "is going to become perfect ... on Monday." A saxophone solo highlighted "Round the Clock Lovin," with Oslin playing a happy, upbeat keyboard. "All I need is a marathon lover / And I need it 24 hours every day." The saxophone continued to make its presence felt into "Doctor, Doctor," a song Oslin says she told her record company that "it should have been a single, but they said no." It was quite a production, and her spirited vocals drew hearty applause.

"People have comebacks at this age, but they don't start at this age," Oslin said, reflecting a philosophical mood about her delayed success. "I'm at the happiest point in my life now. I feel smarter, more in control of things. Young twenty-year-old boys come up to me and give me flowers. I'm talkin' real cuties."

One of her favorites, the 1940's song "You Call Everybody Darling," turned into a clap-along. The band's soothing harmonizing combined nicely with flavors of saxophone on the number one single, "I'll Always Come Back." Cymbal effects that sounded like whips cracking snapped through "Get Back in the Saddle," a song Oslin threw out to the audience for evaluation. Being considered for placement on her new album, the song drew favorable response. "That's a "yay" for Cohasset," she quipped. Oslin's soft, subdued number one single, "Do Ya," asked "Do ya love me?" The gathering showed their approval with a roaring standing "O," prompting the love-triangle-based encore, "Jealous," in which Oslin's heartfelt theatrics left her reeling from the gut. The expression on her face was not that of an entertainer approaching her fiftieth birthday, rather that of a little girl whose lollipop fell out of her mouth while playing in the sandbox.

"It's like this dream I'm having," Oslin has said of her relatively newfound success. "I feel like I'm playing the role of the country singer. I want to manage my money well, I want to have fun, and I'd like to write and sing and then get out in a very short period of time, while I'm still held in high regard.

"This is all I ever wanted to do."

Hingham's dixieland jazz trio, the Sugarfoot Stompers, entertained in a warm-up capacity.

We wave from the window of our lives

By Tanna Kasperowicz
Special to the Mariner

People are always coming and going and now you're the people coming and going.

Every year when you leave, the streets of Tinytown get quieter and darker so quick it's like somebody pulled an opaque window blind. This year everyone thought Hurricane Bob caused the big change in Tinytown. My neighbor said:

Isn't it amazing? After the hurricane the days got shorter and quieter. Even the angle of the sun is different!

Of course the rest of us knew it wasn't the hurricane at all. It was just that some of you left for college after the hurricane; others of you were getting ready to leave. I saw Charlie Henry of UPS picking up boxes and trunks all over Tinytown. He came to our house to pick up yours. I really thought about that as he pulled away, taking part of you with him.

Yesterday, we watched you collecting memories.

We had to wonder when you mowed the lawn without our asking. I saw you having a quiet talk with the dog; I knew you were wondering if he'd be here when you returned.

Hey, the times are crazy. If two weeks ago I said our lights were out so long after the hurricane that a civil war began and ended in the Soviet Union you would think that was a long time, right? Well, our lights were out 58 hours and that's about how long the civil war lasted. So, in these times, you kids can count on almost nothing.

People will show up along your way. Some will be friends, some will be lovers. Some will be people you share laughter with, with some you will share sorrows, dreams. But there is no one here nor will you meet anyone anywhere who will travel the distance. It really is the trip you've been wanting. A one-way ticket. There are no returns.

That's not to say you won't be back to Tinytown again, because of course you will. But when your former teachers will forget and call you by your older brother's name (they forget so quickly); and now you can have coffee in the teacher's room at Tinytown High School—where you'll talk about the fresh frosh—the immature 7th graders. Only the seniors will seem people of substance. Life is always turning the tables on everyone.

Today, the quiet you are making sits in our socks like 4,000 lead pennies.

We wave from the window of our lives—Goodby! Goodby!

And blow so many kisses the trees bow—shooting their branches into Love's eye!

Here we are in the end of August and my tomatoes are still green.

I admire my friend Laura because she is a fantastic writer, storyteller and photographer; but she can't drive. And her sculptures leave a lot to be desired. Several years ago she was parked parallel to the street right in front of Cards n' Shards, when a bus went by and tore her car door off its hinge, and dragged it up the street to the Red Lion.

Now, you're thinking the bus was at fault, right? Wrong. In Tinytown, it's perfectly appropriate for a bus to rip your car door off its hinge. According to Dedham Court (county government), when you are parallel parked it is illegal for you to exit your car from the driver's side. You are supposed to climb over the gear shift, over your bucket seats, etc., running your stockings, splitting your pants, and exit your car from the passenger's side. Does something seem violently wrong here?

In any case, last week, when Laura was driving by Tinytown Common she almost bumped into a very petite blonde, who managed a giant smile as Laura just avoided hitting her. "I thought she looked familiar," Laura said, realizing when she read the newspaper the next day that she almost bumped off Goldie Hawn. Goldie will never know what she missed.

Let my friend tell you about choking on a corn chip:

"I was in my kitchen eating corn chips and I started to choke. Nevertheless, as I was choking wildly, I put another corn chip in my mouth and tried to eat it. And I thought oh dear Lord, if I choke to death, I will have certainly deserved it."

* * *

Two days before the storm my friend moved her mother-in-law into senior housing. The accommodations were lovely, many new senior friends visited their new neighbor, and all meals of course were provided. My friend's mother-in-law is frightened of storms, so when the lights went out last Monday afternoon, and when several big trees fell, my friend worried about her.

My friend felt a lot better when she was told the center had its own electrical generator, so her mother-in-law would not be without lights. Actually, she would be without nothing.

Hurricane Bob hit, and my friend and her family were without electricity for three days. By the third day many Tinytown residents were feeling pretty grubby and my friend and her family were no exception. As my friend's husband returned from his job after a 24 hour emergency shift, the phone rang. He was bleary-eyed. It was his mother.

She was very annoyed. The battery on her TV switcher wasn't working.

Noel Ripley says he has a new supply of Lighthouse Tee shirts. Said when "Housesitters" hired him to sit in the First Parish clock tower for 10 hours, he wrote thank you notes to all the people donating to the Minot Light House replica. Hope you got one.

Murray meets with elder caucus

Members of the Legislative Caucus on Older Citizens' Concerns met with Secretary of Elder Affairs Franklin Ollivierre recently at the State House.

Legislators and advocates questioned Ollivierre about the Weld administration's commitment to older citizens' concerns. The Secretary said that their long-term goal was to move as many elderly as possible into community based housing instead of nursing homes and to tighten up all existing programs without cutting any services. Ollivierre was unable to provide specific proposals, admitting that the plans were "in the works" and that it would be "a difficult task."

Recent budget cuts will drop about 2,000 elders from eligibility for nursing homes and more than 10,000 from home care services which often keep people from needing costly institutionalization.

Representative Mary Jeanette Murray, a member of the Caucus, noted that this was the first time that Ollivierri had met with many of the advocacy groups. "It's good to see a signal from the Weld administration that they are willing to listen to our concerns," she said. "However, I am still very concerned about the cuts in programs for senior citizens. I am looking forward to working closely with Sec. Ollivierre and the members of the Caucus to address these problems and ensure that our older citizens receive the services they need and deserve," Murray added.

The Caucus is also closely monitoring two bills. H-5530, An Act To Provide Rate Relief For MediGap Insurance Subscribers, would help seniors who live on a fixed income and whose Medex rates are again scheduled to increase this month. S-385, which the Caucus is also following, would help regulate the sale and distribution of hearing aids.

Mary Jeanette said she is a supporter of these two bills and will be working along with other members of the Caucus to ensure their passage.

Shaggy dog story involves South Shore communities vacations in Vermont, Reardon asserted.

As the Reardons searched fruitlessly for their wayward pet, the Hingham Animal Control Officer Albert Currie discovered Fluffy roaming around Beal Street in Hingham. Just a mile away sits the Reardons' old Talbot Street home where Fluffy spent her first three years.

NAKED RED COLLAR

Although Reardon said Fluffy had been wearing dog tags, Currie said Fluffy's red collar was naked by the time he found her two days later on July 6.

"Thank God dog tags aren't lost all that often," Currie said, "but it does happen."

Currie then took the dog to Kressingham Kennels in South Hingham.

Jennifer Lewis, who has run the kennel for 13 years, said the mutt was "wonderful" and "friendly."

Calling the dog "Ginger," Lewis advertised the "chow-mix" in local newspapers, including The Norwell Mariner. After the 21-day minimum waiting period expired, Lewis turned the dog over to a "super nice" Norwell woman.

Korene Westhaver, 35, said she felt the "fur ball" she called "Missy" had an owner somewhere. "It was too nice a dog."

Westhaver liked the "mellow, happy and friendly" dog, but her husband would not let her adopt it. Keeping the dog unchained outside her Central Street home for two weeks, she was preparing to give it to a friend when it suddenly disappeared.

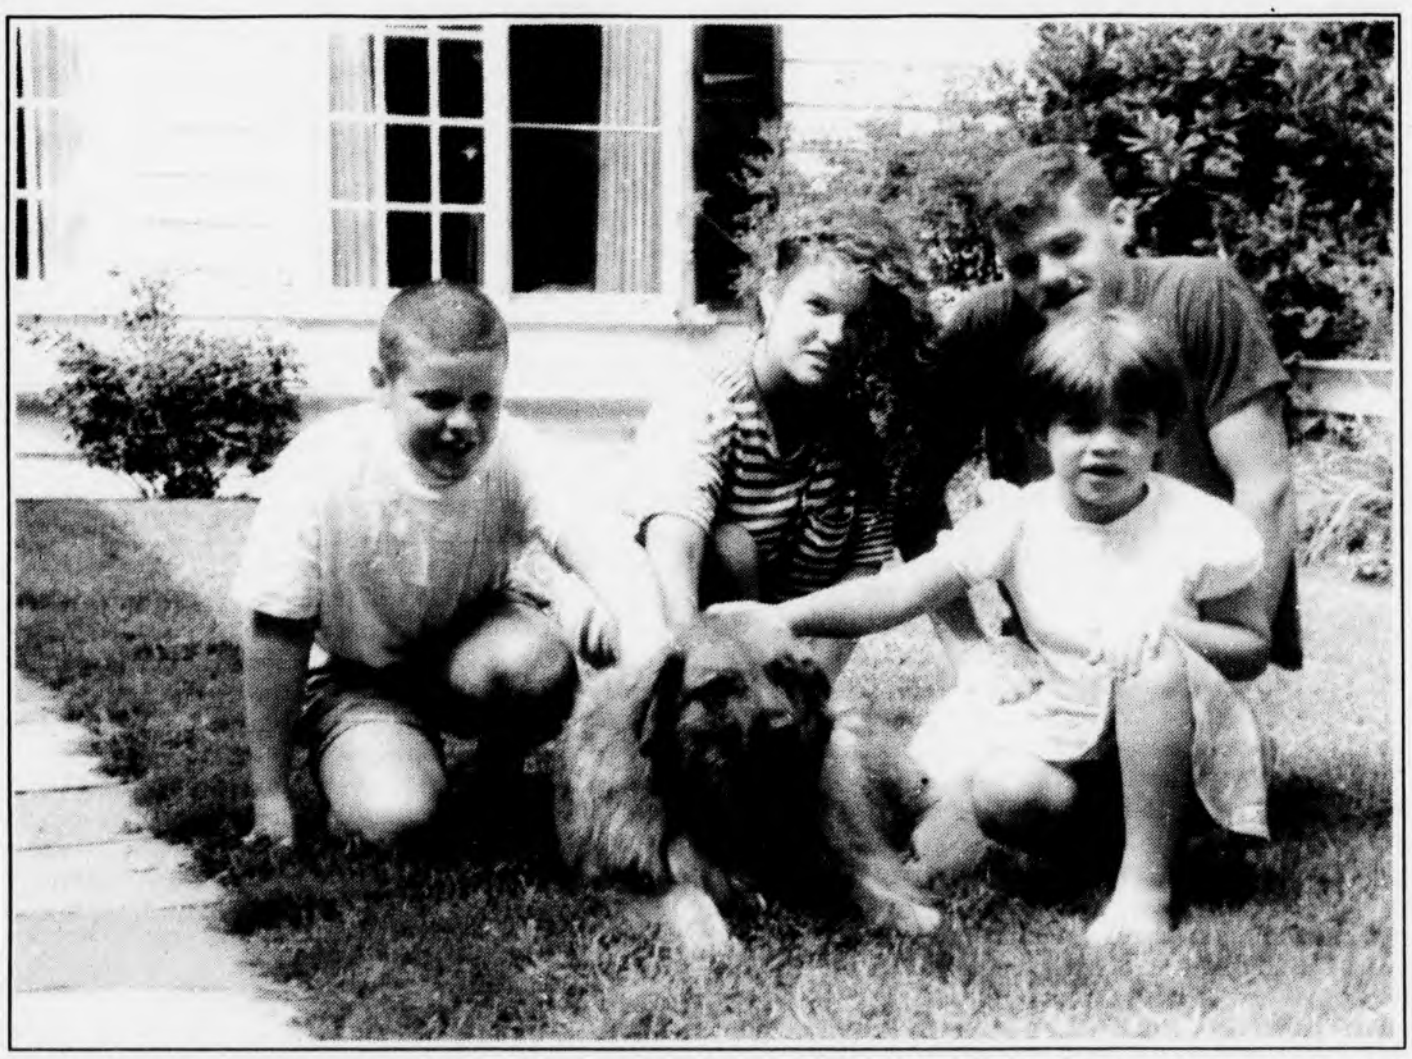
Unsure of Fluffy's real name, Westhaver drove around her neighborhood shouting "Here, girl!" that evening but Fluffy was gone.

A.W.O.L.

That very evening, the Reardons discussed getting a new dog to replace the A.W.O.L. Fluffy.

At quarter of 7 the next morning, August 12, Reardon's sister-in-law, Jane, was driving south on Route 3A. At the Route 123 junction, she spotted a reddish-colored dog "lying in the middle of a grassy field.

"It was so low to the ground I thought it must be dead," Jane Reardon said, as she drove on. But she turned back because she had to find out for sure.



"I yelled 'Fluffy' and it immediately jumped up and came running."

Fluffy jumped for joy when Jane turned into Red Gate Lane, the street her family lives on.

"My sister and I burst out laughing," Reardon said as the semi-dressed family ran out to greet their dog. "Everyone came out. The children were ecstatic."

Jane said: "We all missed her."

By the next day, Reardon said, Fluffy was back to her old self, snoozing away under the rhododendrons.

Fluffernutter enjoys the sun in the front yard of her Cohasset home. During her five-week journey through Hingham, Norwell and Scituate, she also answered to "Ginger," "Missy" and "Girl". Joing her are the Reardon children: Ted,12; Tracy,16; Tom,17. (Staff photo/Todd R.Wallack)

Hurricane Bob blew $10,000 from town coffers

"The lack of a good phone service here put an added burden on the police and fire departments," Doyon said.

Doyon is also recommending that town hall have access to a generator to power the phone lines, typewriters and adding machines so business can go on as usual regardless of wind and rainy weather.

According to Selectman Rocco Laugelle, the town may be able to use the generator at the high school to power the sewage treatment plant and free up the portable generator currently used at the treatment plant for use at town hall or the high school.

Town counsel Richard Henderson warned selectmen the town may face a storm-related problem at the landfill.

According to Henderson, the state brought a lawsuit against Cohasset for having an unsited landfill stemming from a huge pile of brush piled up after Hurricane Gloria and left to sit for years.

Henderson said the state refused to grant the town permission to burn the brush or dump it elsewhere, then filed suit when the town simply left the pile in place.

Residents have been bringing brush and tree limbs knocked down by Hurricane Bob to the landfill. If nothing is done with the resulting pile, Cohasset could risk another unsited landfill suit.

Selectman Martha Gjesteby asked Doyon to work out a solution with Health Agent Joseph Godzik.

Selectmen capped off the discussion with a formal vote to declare the state of emergency over.

Town employees singled out for praise by selectmen included Civil Defense Director Arthur Lehr, acting Police Chief Bob Jackson, Highway Surveyor Harold Litchfield, Tree, Park and Cemetery Superintendent Peter Laugelle, Harbormaster Irv Gadow, Executive Secretary Greg Doyon, Joyce Studley, Ellen Winn, Fire Chief Dan Brock and the fire department, Wire Superintendent Stephen Wigmore and Assistant Superintendent of Wires Richard Gallo.

In other business, selectmen:

• Voted to approve the mutual aid agreement for an unmanned ambulance jointly owned with Hingham, Norwell and Scituate subject to a rider limiting Cohasset's insurance liability.

• Granted a release of an unused town easement on 5 Woodland Road subject to approval at special town meeting.

• Granted permission for use of the town hall parking lot for a mobile mammography screening Sept. 7 under the auspices of the Social Service League.

• Approved expansion of the MIIA claims review service program to police and fire fighters even though they are not covered by workers' compensation. The claims review program reviews bills for accuracy and reasonableness of charges and monitors long-term rehabilitation cases. The selectmen's decision will be reviewed by the insurance committee.

• Approved borrowing $115,000 for repair projects at Osgood and the high school approved at town meeting.

Towns try to shed light on Eastern Utilities

By Judy Enright
Mariner staff

Government and emergency services officials huddled in a work session Monday in Norwell to hammer out a unified message of concern for Eastern Utilities.

Spokesmen from seven towns — Norwell, Hanover, Scituate, Rockland, Abington, Pembroke and Cohasset— all of whom are serviced by the Brockton-based utility company, met in Norwell at the behest of Selectman Chairman Donald LeClair. Also attending was Rep. Janet O'Brien, D-Hanover, who represents Norwell, Hanover and Rockland.

The meeting, LeClair said, was to identify common problems that arose during the recent hurricane relating to utilities. "The primary problem," LeClair said, "was the failure of the company to communicate with the public and the fire chiefs in response to their problems."

There was also a failure on Eastern Utilities' part to provide adequate equipment to the towns to handle problems.

And, the company didn't designate a representative to stay in towns during the storm. Local officials were required to deal with Utility spokesmen in Brockton.

Officials also felt that Eastern Utilities seemed to be unprepared for the severity of the storm.

LeClair added that officials referred to a master plan, allegedly drawn up after Hurricane Gloria, and said it was not implemented. They agreed that promises made to them after Gloria were not fulfilled.

LeClair said that a second work session will be held — probably next week — and that officials would then meet with John Carney, president of Eastern Utilities, and other company officials to work out future logistics and identify major safety problems.

Brockton's finest vie for opening . . .

"I've probably seen everything I need to see. I never have to see it again," he said. "Cohasset isn't immune. The calls will be the same — just less frequent."

He already has experience with small town life. After 28 or 29 years living in Brockton, he moved to Hingham.

"I love the quaintness."

His favorite part of police work was interacting with people.

"Unfortunately the nice ones were usually the victims," he added.

The part of police work he didn't enjoy were the child victims of abuse or accidents.

"I couldn't go to sleep, I had to call the hospital to check on them," the father of two said.

DaSilva holds an associates degree in criminal justice from Roger Williams College.

According to Executive Secretary Greg Doyon, the next steps in the process include interviews of each candidate by Police Chief Joseph Kealey and background checks.

Art by Doolittle featured

The Artist's Son Gallery, Jonathan Livingston Square, Route 3A, Cohasset, is featuring the newest work by North America's leading artist in print, Beverly Doolittle.

Represented by The Greenwich Workshop, an international art publisher, her newest work, Sacred Circle, focuses on the recurring theme in her art: wilderness and wildlife.

In this work, Doolittle linked nine separate images to tell her story of the Sacred Circle — the symbol of the delicate balance of all living things, including man. The artist says the Sacred Circle "reminds us to understand the world around us and to discover ourselves within that world."

Unique about this print is the goal on behalf of The Greenwich Workshop to raise $1 million to support two organizations' conservation wildlife education efforts. For every print sold, the Workshop is donating $10 of which $8 will go to the National Wildlife Federation and $2 will go to the Canadian Wildlife Federation.

In addition, each print sold will be accompanied by a complementary full-length video titled; "Bev Doolittle, Sacred Circle, Conserving Nature's Delicate Balance," which explores the print's meaning and focuses on environmental concerns.

The Artist's Son Gallery, the South Shore's only authorized Greenwich Workshop dealer, is featuring Sacred Circle and other works by Bev Doolittle through September 30th. The Gallery is open daily Monday through Thursday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., Friday and Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. For more information, call 617-383-1841.

Yoga classes listed

The South Shore YMCA will be offering two Yoga classes beginning Wednesday, September 18. This is an 8-week exercise class designed to improve body and mental control.

The program will focus on six key areas: deep relaxation and breathing, physical postures, flexibility, strength, poise and balance, and concentration.

A letter to our customers:

Safety is our highest priority

During last week's storm emergency, Eastern Edison complied with requests made by community officials in the towns of Halifax, Norwell and Scituate to disconnect electric service to their entire communities.

Anytime a storm of the magnitude of Hurricane Bob hits, a major concern of local officials and Eastern Edison's highest priority is the safety of the residents who live in our communities.

We received more than 6,500 reports of downed wires as a result of the hurricane. That is why we agreed with — and endorsed — the request by community leaders to interrupt electric service until the extensive damage caused by the storm could be cleared, opening the way for emergency vehicles and repair crews.

The physical damage caused by Hurricane Bob was extensive in these communities. Our area was fortunate to escape its wrath without the loss of life. This is due, in part, to the decisions made by the local community leaders. We feel that the decision made by these communities was the right one.

Hull dominates Tigers

By John Kinchla
Special to the Mariner
August 17, 1991

In a penalty riddled game that concluded with a series of individual scuffles, the Cohasset High School Hockey team lost to a resurgent Hull team in the ninth game of the Pilgrim Arena's Senior High School Summer Hockey program. The loss lowered Cohasset's record to three wins and six losses.

Hull's State Hockey Scoring Champion, 11th grader, Eric Healy demonstrated his artistry, by scoring four goals and assisting on three others for Hull. Healy's performance was noted by at least one collegiate and professional scout.

Cohasset was unprepared for this contest. Hull employed a wide open passing game. Hull's defensemen played superbly. The defensemen controlled the puck within their own end while Hull's speedy wings camped on Cohasset's blue line awaiting the breakaway pass.

Cohasset's defensemen were consistently caught up ice throughout this contest. Cohasset's 7th grade goal tender, Kevin McKenna, was frequently the single lone obstacle between Hull and the goal.

Two Cohasset players deserve special mention for their quiet determined play against Hull. Cohasset center iceman Mike Reynolds tried vigorously the stem the Pirates and winger Charlie Endris also emerged as an elusive penetrater.

Cohasset's backchecking style of play became confused when outlet men could not be found up-ice, and the wings became tangled with their own defense.

Over the last three Fridays the Tigers have slid from a 3-3 record to a 3-6 record. the team cohesion and communication which allowed this team to tie for the best record in the Pilgrim's Spring program was not in evidence against Hull. Unfortunately their lack of preparation certainly contributed to the loss.

Cheerleaders shine

The Varsity Squad consists of three Seniors (tri-captain), one Junior, and four Sophomores for football 1991.

The Squad was picked in June, and since that time, they have been practicing periodically. In July, the girls traveled to Derby Academy and gave a demonstration to the Fine Arts Program.

Five of the eight cheerleaders took the opportunity to go to Cheerleading Camp held at Emmanuel College in Boston. (Rebecca Hackenburg, Lisa Kondrat, Heather Brennock, Becky Callentine, and Aimee Mitchell). During camp the girls worked on the College Military Style cheerleading which Cohasset had never performed the Cohasset girls were awarded a Trophy for "Most Improved Cheerleaders of the Week" and many awards for excellence and o utstanding performances.

Cheerleaders shine . . .

The girls have taken all of the material that they received at camp and are now teaching it to the rest of the squad.

To further their knowledge of the Military Style cheering, Coach Ruthann Sargent held a one day camp at Cohasset High School with BC's Rachel Cruetz. Rachel reviewed the material the girls brought back from camp and added some more new cheers.

Looking forward to seeing you on the football field this season.

To all persons interested in the estate of Richard L. Fallon late of Cohasset, in said County, deceased.

You are hereby notified pursuant to Mass. R. Civ. P. Rule 72 that the first and final account(s) of Leslie A. Fallon - Administratrix (the fiduciary) of said estate has been presented to said Court for allowance.

If you desire to preserve your right to file an objection to said account(s), you or your attorney must file a written appearance in said Court at Dedham on or before the ninth day of October, 1991, the return day of this citation. You may upon written request by registered or certified mail to the fiduciary, or to the attorney for the fiduciary, obtain without cost a copy of said account(s).

If you desire to object to any item of said account(s), you must, in addition to filing a written appearance as aforesaid, file within thirty days after said return day or within such other time as the Court upon motion may order a written statement of each such item together with the grounds for each objection thereto, a copy to be served upon the fiduciary pursuant to Mass. R. Civ. P. Rule 5.

WITNESS, Robert M. Ford, Esquire, First Justice of said Court, this twenty-third day of August, 1991.

Town meeting articles remain secret

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

While the warrant for the special town meeting officially closed on Sept. 3, the selectmen's executive secretary Greg Doyon refused to disclose the subject matter of the potential articles Tuesday.

He said the selectmen had not yet seen the articles. He pointed out that the selectmen, who meet Sept. 9 at 7:30 p.m., may refuse to accept some of the articles.

"Give me a letter," he replied to a request to go over the folder with the understanding that the warrant was not yet set in printer's ink.

He said some of the articles were "just jottings from my pen" at that point and needed to go to town counsel.

The special town meeting convenes Oct. 7 to adjust the town budget. Officials say free cash can be used to offset the $100,000 shortfall in state aid.

On Aug. 26 when selectmen called for the special town meeting, Doyon said he expected there would be about 15 articles in the warrant.

It is known that there are three articles sponsored by the citizen's group SAFE, Stop Any Further Expansion. SAFE is working to prevent expansion of the Cohasset Heights landfill.

John McNabb, one of the leaders of SAFE, said that all three articles were filed in the selectmen's office

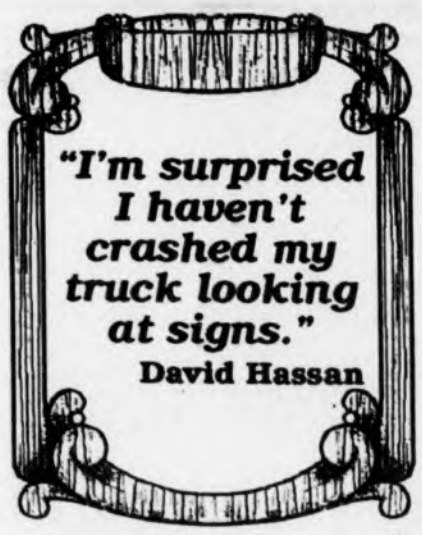
Hassan see his signs all over



By Alison Cohen
Mariner correspondent

David Hassan embarked on a career in woodcarving and sign making in a most haphazard way.

He majored in math in college. Although he had the aptitude, math didn't speak to him.

"I got pretty well bored," he confesses. So he gave English and anthropology a whirl. They, too, left him cold.

Then he built a small wooden chest and decided to carve a design on top. The rest, as they say, is history.

Two decades later, Hassan knows he still has the chest. He's just not sure where it is. And he remembers carving the design.

"It took me 40 or 50 hours," he remembers. "I could do the same job in a half hour today."

The only background Hassan brought to the project was the little knowledge he garnered in a junior high shop class and afternoons spent learning to draw with television's Captain Bob. His only tools were makeshift — he didn't even know there were special woodcarving knives.

"I'm self-taught," he said. His tutors were books and trial and error experimentation. "I'm still learning."

At 21, Hassan decided to go into the sign business. He had precious little competition in those early years. Scanning businesses and public buildings up and down the South Shore shows how much talent lurked in the self-taught signmaker.

Hassan signs hold sway in Cohasset village. The Red Lion and Kit 'n Kaboodle boast early Hassan signs. His creations also hang from The Red Balloon, Liquors Unlimited and Little Harbor book store.

Hassan signs range from the simple to the sublime. They may be as simple as Roman letters in gold on wood to an intricately carved clipper ship sailing out of a sign in all its 3-D glory.

Hassan keeps a scrap book with photos of all the signs he's created over the years. His designs feature flowers, trees, ships, pilgrims and seashells. He loves to be presented with new challenges although it's hard to believe there is any subject matter he hasn't designed and carved already.

One secret to his success in a down economy is diversification. In addition to the handcarved and painted signs, Hassan's workshop tackles truck lettering, banners and signs of all sorts. His shop produces hand-lettered and air brush sign work.

"I've even created interior-lit, plastic signs," he says. His orders keep three employees busy.

One of Hassan's biggest jobs was the mammoth sea captain sculpture that greets patrons at Kimball's By The Sea. It's unlikely Hassan will ever make another. Although he loved the work,it claimed 300 hours of his time.

Reba McEntire shines at Music Circus

By Bruce Compton
Special to the Mariner

The rhinestone cowgirl of country music, Reba McEntire, whose grown-up tomboy voice rattles the rafters in some venues, more than tickled the tent Sunday, Sept. 1, at the South Shore Music Circus. The audience, a mixed bag of guys and gals, youngsters and oldsters, discovered, if they hadn't already, why McEntire's brassy voice has critics comparing her favorably to Patsy Cline as the finest female country singer to come along in decades.

The dominant woman in today's mainstream country music, Reba has received the Country Music Association's Female Vocalist of the Year Award six of the last seven years. The Gallup Youth Survey reported that American teenagers have picked her as one of their ten favorite female vocalists. No other female country singer had ever before made the list.

Coastweeks beach clean up

The tenth annual Coastweeks will be observed by people throughout the United States from Sept. 21 to Oct. 14. Coastweeks focuses attention on the shores of our nation.

Here in Hingham we can acknowledge the value of our own shores by participating in Coast Clean Up Day on Sept. 21.

Last year about one and a half tons of debris was collected and logged by volunteers in Hingham. Coordinating the efforts in town are Betsy Harling and Nick Cockinos.

Wreath gives greeting

Recently the Seventh Grade class officers Caitlin Connolly, Tafana Fiore, and Amie Theriault visited the new Residence Home in Cohasset.

A "Cohasset Wreath" was donated as a gift from the seventh grade class. We would like to welcome them to the town and wish them a happy stay.

"If you see Kelly, Cathy, or Ester around town, please welcome them," the girls said.

They're finding it to be the ideal place to relax, read the paper, stroll the deck, enjoy a snack and some freshly-brewed coffee. Or they're finding it the ideal place to get a jump on the day's workload because our boats are now equipped with telephones and plenty of tables that make great desks. Hassan see his signs all over

Five or six years ago, Hassan's interests and talents led him into creating complete packages for businesses — everything from the logo design to store signs and business cards. Hassan finds design the most challenging and rewarding work he does.

"I like to create an image, a look," he said. He emphasizes how a well-designed, eye-catching sign makes a business memorable. It is, he says, a small investment that can pay large dividends.

"I try to sell up," he says. "It makes them stand out and sets them apart from their competitors.

One example of his design work is Buttonwood Books and Toys. Hassan designed their logo after intensive research and experimentation. The logo forms a unifying motif for the shop's signs, business cards, advertising — it even appears on the aprons employees wear on the job.

The biggest challenge he faces is staying on top of the changing zoning bylaws in the communities he serves.

"Sign codes are really tough," he said. "Ten years ago you could design anything you wanted in any size you wanted."

Even working all day creating signs and logos, Hassan still can't get his job out of his system.

"I teach wood carving one night per week in my shop," he said. "I learn more teaching than I do by working. I bet I've tripled my speed because of it."

Hassan limits his classes to 12 students in order to give everyone individual attention. Many of his students keep signing up for additional 10-week sessions.

"Some have been coming for six, seven, eight years," he said. "It's as much social as instructional. It's a real good group of guys."

And guys it is. For reasons Hassan can't explain, his classes seem to draw mostly men with a few women here and there. It appeals to all ages. He's had students from 22 to 70.

The first project students undertake is a name board, usually with scroll and scallop shell. After that, Hassan encourages them to set their own goals with his encouragement and guidance.

Signs constantly capture his attention.

"I'm surprised I haven't crashed my truck looking at signs," he jokes.

When he does manage to tear himself away from the printed and carved word, he can often be found out on the links. He is, he says, an excellent golfer.

Hassan also enjoys trying his hand at the fine arts. His chosen media are oils and water colors.

"I'd like to have more time to do that," he said.

Talking to him, one thing is clear: David Hassan loves his work. He loves doing it, loves thinking about it and loves talking about it.

"I feel very fortunate," he said.

One of Hassan's signs stands at the end of his Beechwood Street driveway. It advertises his wife's nursery school, Spring Tree.

Julie Hassan started her nursery school three years ago. Her goal was to offer other children the kind of high quality experience in a nurturing environment she wanted for her own children.

She spent an entire year planning the perfect nursery school environment and curriculum before opening her doors.

"You have to be sensitive to children's needs," she says. "I work with three and four year olds who can't always say how they are thinking and feeling."

Julie Hassan puts the primary focus on fostering children's self-esteem.

"It's not nearly as import to get into academics like pre-reading skills," she explains. "When they're ready for them, it's wonderful. But being happy, believing 'I'm okay' and 'I can' is the springboard for everything."

Julie Hassan uses her interests and talents in art and music in planning for the children. She encourages the children to explore their own creative side.

"I like children to be creative, to do as much as they are capable of," she said. School art projects reflect her philosophy and their creativity rather than being cookie-cutter images.

With the forests and fields all around, exploring the environment is a big part of the curriculum. The school also has a well-equipped play yard to develop muscles and fitness.

Although the school has a regular schedule of activities, Julie Hassan stresses the importance of flexibility.

"The children need to know what to expect, but it shouldn't be rigid," she said. Sometimes, it's important to go with the flow and seize the spontaneous learning opportunities.

Reading is always part of every day.

"I think reading to children is really important," Julie Hassan said. "It builds a love of books. It is the preliminary to reading."

Stories, games and songs usually relate to the theme of the day. The theme may be a color or shape. Sometimes it is a social skill such as sharing.

The nursery school classroom contains well-defined activity centers everywhere you look. There is the housekeeping and dress-up area, a nature table and aquarium, a cozy reading center and shelves full of blocks and trucks and other toys to stack and manipulate. Artwork fills the walls.

Spring Tree follows the school calendar. It opens in early September and closes in May. The three and four year olds attend school Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Julie Hassan is trying to organize a program for two year olds as well.

The school is fully licensed for 16 children by the state Office for Children. Julie Hassan hired Cohasset resident Jennifer Piepenbrink to share teaching duties. Each day a student is appointed official helper.

"We always have a helper," she said. "It makes the children feel very important."

Like her husband, Julie Hassan is very involved in the fine arts. She had some of her work on display at the South Shore Art Center festival this summer.

Both David and Julie will have to paint furiously to keep a jump ahead of the younger generation of Hassan artists.

Judging by the work of daughters Elizabeth, 9, and Sarah, nearly 6, artistic talent runs rampant in this family. So far, only the cats seem immune to the creative bug.

A sign by David Hassan.

Reba McEntire shines at Circus

Reba came out wearing a pair of black suede boots and a long peach-colored dress with sequins and sparkling black diamond patches. Her long orange hair, which the spotlights complimented, trailed down her back. "A Part of Your Life," an exciting upbeat number, led off the set. "Somewhere in the world," Reba sang, "somebody wants to be a part of your life." A solo by the highly overqualified saxophone player on "I Can't Even Get the Blues" was jolting. Reba's seven-piece band included rhythm, lead, and bass guitars, the saxophone, drums, steel guitar, and piano.

Her clap-along number, "Where Were You," states "You came along one promise too late." The competent drummer led into a vocal chorus duet with the female backing member of the band joining Reba. The title cut from her most recent gold album, "Rumor Has It;" "She has you/Rumor has it/You love her too," succeeded with its penetrating acoustic lead guitar. A song which Reba called "a tear jerker," "Somebody Should Leave," "...Though we hate to give in/We keep hoping somehow we might need each other again" garnered a healthy reception. "The first time I heard that song," Reba told the gathering, "I got chills all over me and it still tears me up."

Only months ago, Reba was sobbing for real, mourning the loss of seven band members who perished in a plane crash. Her current album-in-progress, predictably, reflects that loss. "It's a very close, emotional album," she says of the new material, "but it was also like a healing." Reba's faith in grasping that vessel of strength which pulled her through the hard times remains steadfast. "Whenever I've had a major personal or business decision to make and I didn't know what to do, I'd turn it over to Him," she says of the Lord. "It may take a while to get the answer , but it always comes—He always comes through."

A spine-chilling performance of "Whoever in New England" had the crowd's collective jaws dropping, while terrific saxophone work and a riveting bass beat on "Walk On" further enhanced the festivities. The saxophone and lead guitar joined Reba onstage during the very, very upbeat "Climb That Mountain High," which she dedicated to American soldiers remaining in the Persian Gulf. She wrote the song shortly after playing the role of a survivalist firearms expert in the movie, "Tremors," which she described as a "sci-fi desert western monster comedy." Look for Reba to share the bill with Kenny Rogers in "The Gambler IV: Luck of the Draw," a TV movie slated for screening November 3-4.

Reaching into the archives of her past, Reba pulled out some favorites for a medley which included "How Blue Can I Feel;" "Today Or Never Again;" "You're the First Time I Thought About Leaving;" "I Know How He Feels;" and "What Am I Gonna Do About You." Reba's performance of the well-loved Don Everly classic, "Cathy's Clown," from the "Sweet Sixteen" album, showed the country audience that she is not closed-minded about covering pop songs in concert. Growing up, McEntire had listened to many different kinds of music and watched "American Bandstand" every Saturday.

Going to a Reba concert is a blue sky experience. Glancing around, she scans the faces trying to get her attention: each face she acknowledges with a wink, a wave of the hand, a smile. She has two thousand different facial expressions she can mirror out with cool spontaneity—one personalized expression of gratitude for each of her loyal Music Circus admirers.

Storyteller and twelve-string guitarist Tim Wilson prepared the audience with some down-home Southern humor.

Memories of a great first grade

By Faith Bowker Maloney
Special to the Mariner

Since school recessed in June, I have been to bucolic, restful Ireland, ridden out the fury of Hurricane Bob, observed the overwhelming speed of change in the U.S.S.R., and am now anticipating the reopening of Osgood School.

As I sit at my desk pouring through the potpourri and clutter that has accumulated in the past few weeks, I paused to reflect on my "old" class' memories of 1990-91.

It was indeed a remarkable school year as my 23 first graders and I experienced many conflicts, trials, joys and triumphs together. Throughout the year our thoughts were on Jonathan Rose who had been in Room #7-15 years previous. His reserve unit was called up during Desert Storm. As we wrote to him and dedicated our morning song of "Let There Be Peace on Earth" to him, he became our personal hero. The morning of our class picnic in June, Jonathan appeared at the door in his Army fatigues and won the hearts of all! To me, he was still my first grader who entertained us years ago with "Pink Panther" jokes! Now he was informing my "new" friends about Saudi Arabia!

Over the years teachers naturally wonder about their students but this week I am thinking ahead to my students I have yet to meet. They will come with many needs, expectations and trust. These "clean-slates" will spend more time in school than they will at home for the first time in their lives. The spector is overwhelming and thrilling. May they all have a warm-fuzzy year, making new friends and keeping the old, ready to face the world and make it a better place!

Let there be peace on Earth and let it begin with me!

FIRST GRADE MEMORIES

We hope we will always remember our fall trip to the North Scituate Beach, when some of our pets came to visit; Cookie, Honey, Riff, Fred, Rocky, Mickie and Minnie, Mother's and Father's Day books, Meet the Author, Dedication pages in Mini and Big books, Joel's coming back-to-school!, going to the Big Apple Circus in Boston, finishing Blue Phonics and having the chocolate rabbit treat! war—then peace—writing to Jonathan in Saudi Arabia and then having him home again for a visit in his "old" first grade room, Arbor Day, Mozart coming to Osgood in celebration of his 200th year, writing in journals, sharing birthday treats, going to Mrs. Whitney's birthday box, getting to know Mrs. Marcolini's boys and having snack and playtime with them, our Daffodil party inside with a power failure!, Nancy's Make-Your Own Sundae Party, going to Mrs. Montuori's Shel Silverstein Theater, walking to the Paul Pratt Library to hear about "Wizard Reads," two broken legs and a broken arm!, welcoming Brittany from Belmont, Carlie's dad coming to tell us about lobstering, African dancers for Black History Month, losing teeth!, Snapper Sneaker's Day with a family picnic, no-bake cookies for a holiday party in December, Buddy Reading indoors and outdoors, Buddy Readers with Mrs. Collin's second graders, meeting new friends and keeping old, fire drills and walking to the fire station and ringing the bell, cuisenaire rods, pattern blocks and math "things," our pretend trip to Ireland, Friday Computer Lab, fifth graders' specially-made books, planting daffodils and sunflowers to make our school prettier, Sean's Aunt Virginia, frosting cupcakes, wonderful helping Moms, Granny Bowker, the chicken pox, our picnic at Stephen's with Jonathan coming too! Thank you for all these beautiful, warm fuzzy memories. It has been a challenging, beautiful year with many nice stories experienced by us all.

Tuesday with more than the required number of signatures. The signatures of 100 registered voters are required to force the listing of an article on a special town meeting warrant.

Without the 100 signatures, articles are accepted at the selectmen's discretion.

All three SAFE articles are zoning changes. The planning board was scheduled to meet with SAFE's officials Wednesday night, after the Mariner press deadline, to discuss the articles. A public hearing must be called on the articles before the special town meeting.

The first of the three articles broadens the definition of a "structure" to include a landfill.

According to McNabb, this article is intended to limit the impact of expansion at Cohasset Heights — if the expansion cannot be prevented.

Currently CHL is seeking state approval to open a new area for general refuse. The application seeks to just about double the land area of the dump operation.

Making a landfill a structure would have the effect of putting a height limit on the operation. The height limit in a limited industrial zone is 45 feet.

The application calls for a 60-foot elevation at some point.

McNabb said the expanded landfill — if approved without limits — would be seen from Route 3A. He said the article is an attempt to prevent that from happening.

Other restrictions might apply besides the height limit, but that is the only one SAFE believes would have a real impact.

There were 137 signatures on the petition for that article. The group had seven days to gather the names of registered voters.

The other two articles are changes to the zoning map.

The first of those would change the whole limited industrial zone in the Cohasset Heights area and make it highway business. Included in the area are businesses like Norfolk Conveyor, the old Cohasset Winter Gardens and the landfill.

Industrial operations underway would be grandfathered but there would be limits imposed on expansion.

McNabb said the effect of this article would be to prevent the expansion planned at the landfill.

There were 130 signatures on that petition.

The last article is something SAFE developed in the event the first zoning change fails. It calls for a strip of 400 feet along Route 3A changing from limited industrial to highway business. This article would not kill the expansion plans at Cohasset Heights, but would limit the area involved, according to McNabb.

There were 112 signatures on that petition.

Another article that could be on the warrant is a request from the assessors to develop a position of assistant assessor/appraiser.

The full warrant will be discussed by selectmen Sept. 9 at the board's regular meeting.

• This begins on a sad note, as we lament the passing of one of Cohasset's finest men. Last week, Richard Guilfoyle passed away, while vacationing in Lake Tahoe, Calif.

Dick was truly a fine man, with many honors bestowed on him throughout the years. He was named outstanding Small Businessman of the Bicentennial Year, and congratulated by former Senator Edward Brooke for his efforts; he was a pillar of the Second Congregational Church in Cohasset; he was a decorated veteran of World War II; and he owned and operated three small businesses.

We will always think of Dick when we see some of his brilliant ideas, such as all of the reproductions of historic items and artifacts.

Dick was buried last week in Arlington National Cemetery with a military ceremony, and there was a memorial service held here last Saturday.

We extend our sympathy to his family, and we will never forget what a wonderful, kind man he was.

• Here's some news of a much happier note...Kerri Rhodes, daughter of Jack and Kathy Rhodes, graduated from Bridgewater State Teachers College last week, and is ready for the teaching world. Kerri had a 3.47 Grade Point Average when she graduated, and was inducted into Kappa Delta Ti (the International Honor Society for teachers). That's cum laude folks. Kerri's degree is in early childhood and education. More good news, Kerri is already employed, she has a great job at a pre-school in Norwell. Another happy event for Kerri, she is engaged to Tom Tower of Scituate. It sounds as though your life is wonderfully in place, Kerri, we sure do congratulate you.

• Happy belated birthday greetings go to Norman Swain this week. We tried to reach him to find out what he was doing to celebrate his big day, but his answering machine was on the fritz. Hope it was grand, Norman.

• A round of applause goes to Joan Edmonds Lawrence this week. As most of you know, Joan is the daughter of Mary and Bruce Edmonds of Pond Street. Joan began quilting two years ago, and loves it. She entered some of her work in the Marshfield Fair this year, and won one blue ribbon and two yellow ones. If any of you have seen the fabulous work that is entered there, you know just what a feat that is. There are hundreds of entries, all beautiful, and most have been quilting for years. We are really proud of you and your efforts, Joan, everyone knows the hours and talents that go into the production of a quilt.

• Lots of people are wondering where the assistant Postmaster, Joe Cirella, has been lately. Joe was involved in an accident when a tree came down and hit him, and he had to have surgery. He will be find, but we'll bet that he would love to receive some get well cards, send them to his home on Mann Lot Road in Scituate.

• It is great to report that David LaVange is home from the hospital and recovering at great speed. Keep up the good work David.

• Here's hoping that the same can be said for Ron Beal, who is still in South Shore Hospital. Hope that you are feeling better very soon, and will be home to enjoy a great fall season.

• Tom Wigmore has a new job, and he really likes it. He is working at the Baird Center for Troubled Children, thanks to the efforts of Gary Smith and Mike Marr. Tom reports that it is a nice place to work, and his most recent venture was to go with the kids there to the Saco River for a weekend of canoeing. The place is lucky to have your dedication, Tom, keep up the good work.

• Be sure to tune in Pierson to Person this week (Thursday, Sept. 5, from 8 to 9 p.m. on Channels 3 and 53. Wigmore Pierson will have, Molly Hochkepple, Patriot Ledger correspondent; Cohasset Mariner Editor, Pat Desmond; Scituate Mariner Editor, Marilyn Jackson; and Cohasset Mariner Columnist, Tanna Kasperowicz. On Thursday, Sept. 12, from 8 to 8:30 p.m. professional dancer Tekki Conklin will discuss and

The swirling currents from the Gulf River hit the salt water of the Harbor.

Eastern Edison hammered for poor communication

By Judy Enright
Mariner staff

Government and emergency services officials huddled in a work session Monday in Norwell to hammer out a unified message of concern for Eastern Utilities.

Spokesmen from seven towns — Norwell, Hanover, Scituate, Rockland, Abington, Pembroke and Cohasset— all of whom are serviced by the Brockton-based utility company, met in Norwell at the behest of Selectman Chairman Donald LeClair. Also attending was Rep. Janet O'Brien, D-Hanover, who represents Norwell, Hanover and Rockland.

The meeting, LeClair said, was to identify common problems that arose during the recent hurricane relating to utilities. "The primary problem," LeClair said, "was the failure of the company to communicate with the public and the fire chiefs in response to their problems."

There was also a failure on Eastern Utilities' part to provide adequate equipment to the towns to handle problems.

And, the company didn't designate a representative to stay in towns during the storm. Local officials were required to deal with Utility spokesmen in Brockton.

Officials also felt that Eastern Utilities seemed to be unprepared for the severity of the storm.

LeClair added that officials referred to a master plan, allegedly drawn up after Hurricane Gloria, and said it was not implemented. They agreed that promises made to them after Gloria were not fulfilled.

LeClair said that a second work session will be held — probably next week — and that officials would then meet with John Carney, president of Eastern Utilities, and other company officials to work out future logistics and identify major safety problems.

L'shanah tovah tikatevu

Celebrate year 5752

By Alison Cohen
Mariner correspondent

When the sun sets Sept.8, a new year will begin for Jews. Tradition calls for sharing wedges of apple dipped in honey as a symbol of the wish that the year 5752 will be a sweet and good year.

Jews call this holiday Rosh Hashanah, Hebrew for "beginning of the year." It is considered the anniversary of the creation of the earth.

The early Hebrews chose to begin their new year in autumn rather than spring or mid-winter. Although everything in nature is ripe and soon to die at this time of year, it demonstrates faith that spring will come again and everything will be made new again.

The sound of the shofar, a trumpet made from a ram's horn, signals the beginning of Rosh Hashanah. Whether they attend services during the rest of the year or not, most Jews feel called to come home to the synagogue to take stock of their lives. It represents a communal recommitment to the ethical values of Judaism.

Locally, the congregation of Sha'Aray Shalom in Hingham will swell so greatly that Rosh Hashanah services Sunday night and Monday morning must be held at South Shore County Club as will all Yom Kippur services.

Rosh Hashanah ushers in a 10-day period of reflection and atonement for past errors and transgressions. This period of time is known as the Days of Awe or Days of Repentance.

Legend says a person's acts during the previous year are judged on Rosh Hashanah and their future is written in the Book of Life. The succeeding 10 days offer the opportunity for repentance and redemption before the book is closed and one's fate is sealed on Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement. It represents the belief that justice must always be tempered with mercy. The entire period is known as the High Holy Days.

Rabbis teach that no one is so bad that he cannot change for the better, nor so good that he cannot improve.

Maimonides, a Spanish-born philosopher and rabbi of the 12th century, wrote that there were 24 acts of sin to avoid or atone for. Maimonides led off his list with four acts he considered to be the worst: leading a community to evil, turning another individual from good to evil, failing to correct a child who is doing wrong and commiting wrong acts believing you can always atone for them on Yom Kippur.

He considered the first three acts particularly evil because they harmed the lives of others. The last attempted to play games with God. The remaining sins range from refusing to learn the difference between good and evil to engaging in thoughtlessly negative behaviors like gossiping and keeping bad company.

As serious and introspective as Rosh Hashanah is intended to be, it also contains many joyful aspects, beginning with the feast welcoming the start of Rosh Hashanah to the traditional greeting at the close of services, "L'shanah tovah tikatevu" — "May God inscribe you for a good year."

Congregation Sha'Aray Shalom will hold Rosh Hashanah services at South Shore Country Club Sunday, Sept. 8 and Monday morning, Sept. 9. In order to ensure that every member will have a seat, entrance is by ticket only.

A children's service will be held at the temple Monday at 3 p.m. Tuesday's service will also be held at the temple. It begins at 10 a.m.

For additional information, call the temple at 749-8103.

State open meeting law is simply 'too closed' for comfort

You almost have to wonder why we have an open meeting law in Massachusetts.

Because the one we have isn't worth the paper it's printed on.

The open meeting law was enacted in 1958 and revised in 1975. But its parameters are so broad that officials can use even the flimsiest excuse to go into executive (read: "closed") session, barring the public and press from finding out what they're doing.

Even if a commission violates the law, there are no penalties, even for chronic offenders.

Executive sessions are the most common device officials use to shut themselves off from the people who elected them. There are various requirements for executive session, some of them legitimate.

Unfortunately, one of the excuses for an executive session is "to discuss strategy with respect to negotiations or litigation," and many town counsels. They often interpret this to mean not only lawsuits which have actually been filed, but possible or threatened lawsuits as well.

The problem is, virtually any decision by a public agency could lead to litigation. The current definition is so nebulous as to give commissions a virtual carte blanche to go into closed session whenever they feel like it, particularly when dealing with the type of controversial issues that the public needs to know most.

"There's a real tendency of officials to want to decide if a lawyer's present, somehow litigation is being discussed," notes Rebecca Daugherty of the Washington, D.C.-based Reporters' Committee for Freedom of the Press.

As a result, some states have passed laws providing for a stricter definition of "pending litigation," defining it as only those lawsuits which have actually been filed.

Massachusetts, needless to say, isn't one of them.

While Massachusetts isn't unique in the liberties that officials take with loopholes in the open meeting law, the lack of significant penalties in our law is more disturbing.

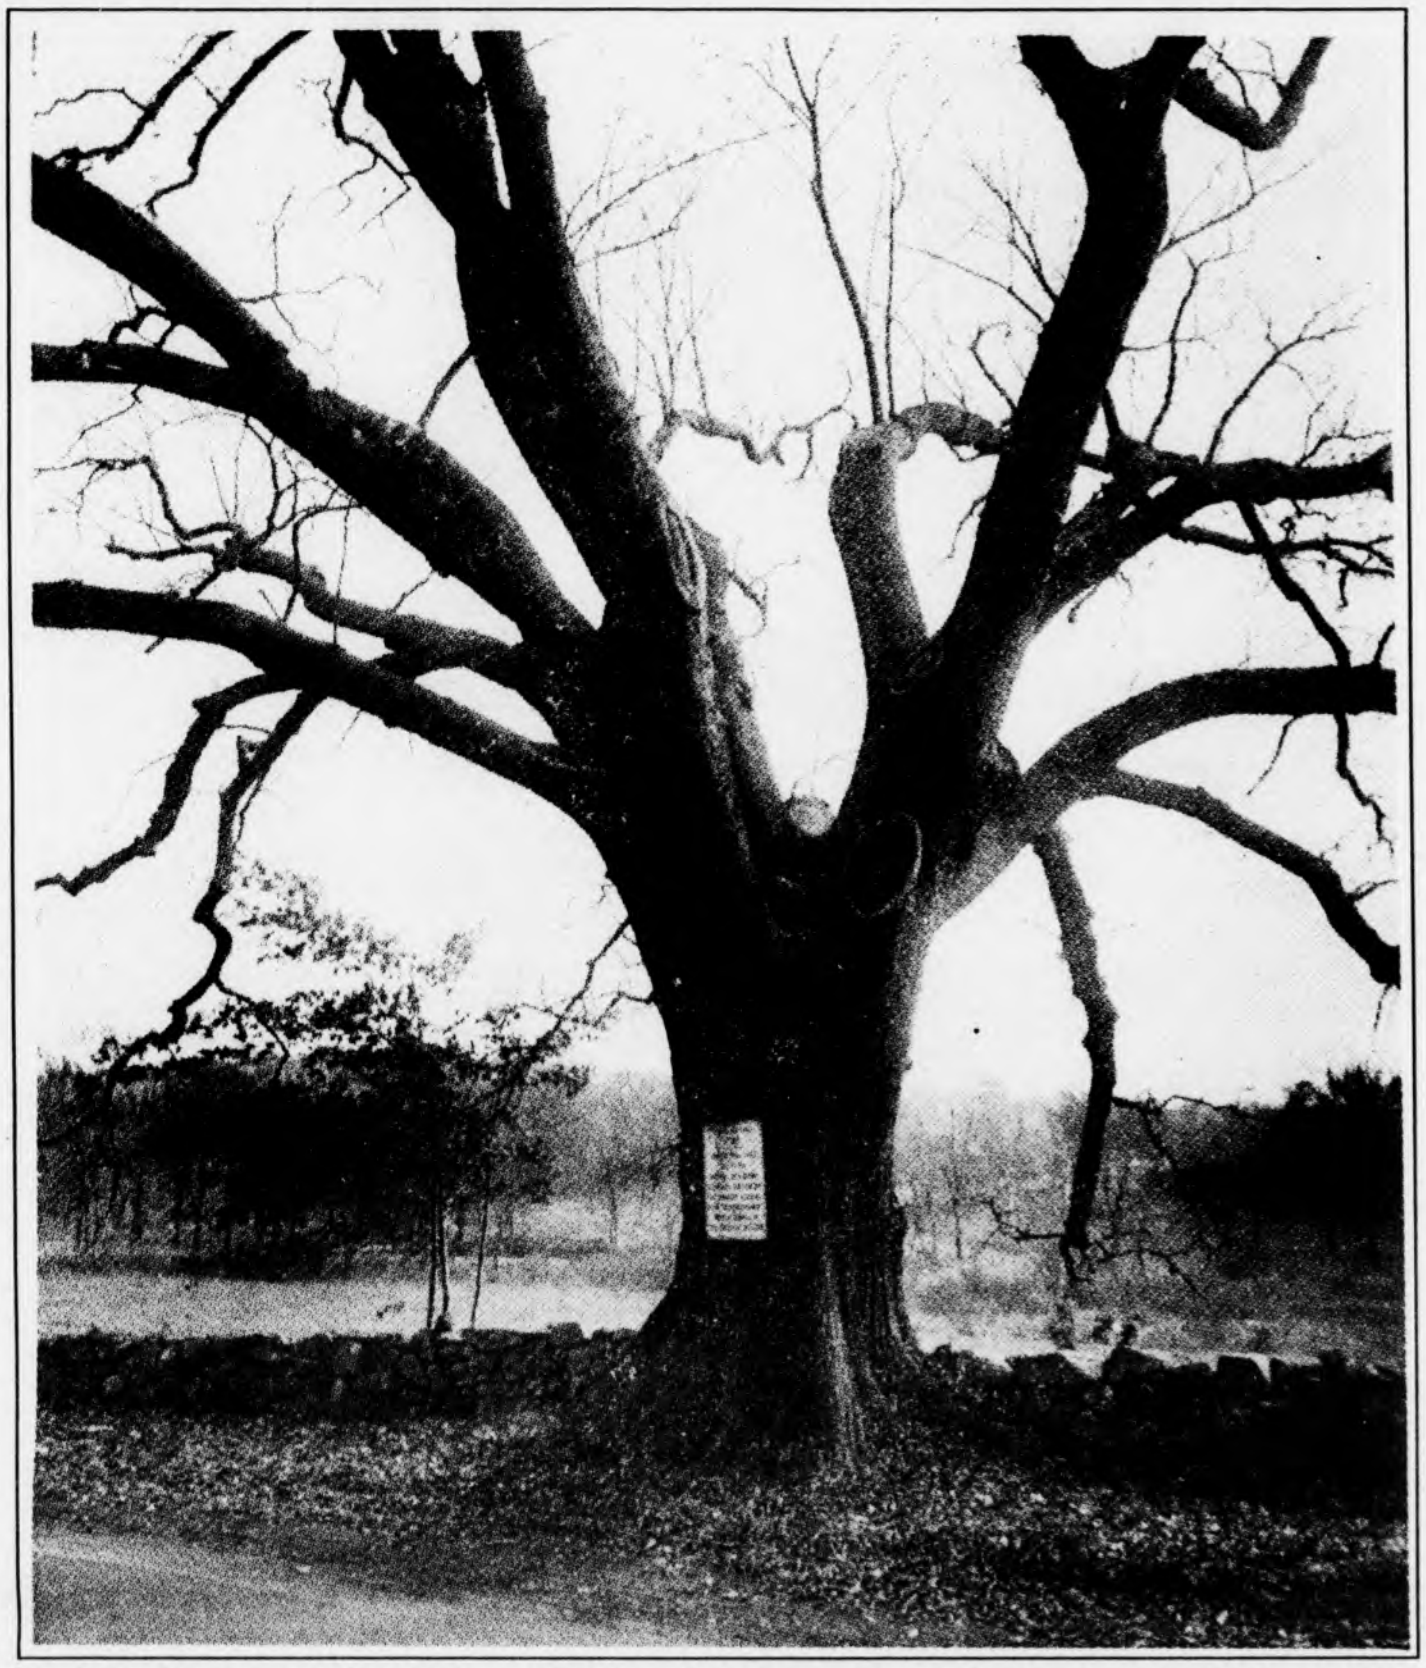
Even if a board were so incompetent that it managed to miss one of these convenient pretexts, there's no meaningful penalty even if they break the law.

For instance, the court can order the agency to comply with the Open Meeting Law in the future.

Or they can invalidate any action taken in an improper closed session and order the board to do it again in open session — telling the board to do what they should have done in the first place, in other words.

And that's it — there are no fines or other penalties. Simply put, the law lacks any deterrent effect.

Massachusetts legislators could take a cue from the state of Maryland, which this year passed a law providing for a civil penalty of $100 for any official who participates in an illegal closed session.



Eight states have laws which provide for disciplinary action, suspension or removal of officials who violate the open meeting law. Minnesota has a "three strikes and you're out" approach. An official who violate the open meeting law three times can be thrown off the board for the remainder of their term.

Connecticut has a Freedom of Information Commission, a quasi-judicial state agency which can levy fines against repeat offenders or order first-time offenders to attend an informational workshop.

There's a larger question here, and it has to do with the kind of people who should and shouldn't run for public office.

If an official isn't willing to do business out in the open or have their actions and views made public, they can always remain in the private sector. And probably should.

Buttonwood tree was surpassed long ago

To the Editor:

In connection with your interesting piece about the loss of the big buttonwood tree on Beechwood Street in Hurricane Bob you might be interested to look at page 552 of Bigelow's "Narrative History of Cohasset" where there appears a list of "Measurements of Trees" made in 1898 by Dr. O.H. Howe. The tree that fell seems to be the fifth one on his list.

The fourth one on the list, a buttonwood on Highland Avenue at the village end of the Common, is still there and is the largest in circumference that I know of. I recently measured it to be 188 inches which is an increase of 50 inches since Dr. Howe did it in 1898.

Storm help was greatly appreciated

To the Editor:

Please convey to your readers our profound "Thank You" to all the dedicated Town of Cohasset employees who helped clean up after Hurricane Bob.

We were particularly impressed by the fast response, excellent preparation and cooperation of the Tree and Park, Fire and Police Departments as they cleared our big old buttonwood tree from Beechwood Street. Thanks also to the local Eastern Edison crew and the visiting Mohawk Electric crew who came to Cohasset to help us all get our electricity restored.

Sincerely,
Alicia and John Seavey

Beware of jogging hazards

To the Editor:

The pedestrians and joggers of Cohasset should be more aware of the dangerous practice of using the right side of the road. They should use the left side, facing the oncoming traffic.

Cohasset roads are so narrow and winding that one should be alert to traffic danger and not let it sneak up from behind. Keeping to the left is especially important after dark. A driver's lights will more readily pick up the face of a person coming toward him/her, than the back of a head.

Sue Jackson named Scot Auxiliary leader

By Tanna Kasperowicz
Queen of South Main Street

At the conclusion of the Flying Scot Auxiliary Awards ceremony last weekend, Auxiliary President Mrs. Karin (Steve-in-the-phone book) Bartow turned over the symbol of what the FS Auxiliary does: a 38 person casserole dish.

"Make Casserole," Mrs. Bartow told Mrs. Sue (Robert-in-the phone book) Jackson.

Mrs. Bartow said:

"Mrs. Jackson, I'm sure you are just learning this moment that Hunta Jackson has agreed to be the Fleet Captain next year. Well, with that title comes your title—National FS Auxiliary President. Naturally, you will work closely with Hunta Jackson, coordinating hot dogs, tack parties, casseroles, awards ceremonies and listening to protests."

Former Auxiliary President Mrs. Bartow wore an orange and green feathered straw hat, white gloves, square neck blouse with gold buttons, and shorts. Mrs. Jackson arrived at the ceremonies with potatoes in her blouse, but was told to remove them. She wore a blue pillbox hat with veil, colorful beads, and gloves. Mrs. Jackson said she was furious with Hunta Jackson for not telling her anything about his two-year stint as FS Fleet Captain. She also said she didn't know (edited) about the FS Auxiliary President thing.

In her opening remarks, Mrs. Bartow welcomed the Huntas and their spouses, giving special recognition to the Fleet's new Black Sea chapter. Also, she noted that the auxiliary had filed a discrimination suit on behalf of FS Skipper Ann Musto. This reporter later learned the suit is against the entire fleet with the exception of Hunta Dan Walsh.

Mrs. Jackson named the following auxiliary members for their excellent work: Mrs. Barbara (Jim-in-the phone book) Lyons; Mrs. Ann (Paul-in-the phone book) Musto; Mrs. Angie (Dan-in-the phone book) Walsh; Mrs. Carolyn (Richard-in-the phone book) Horn; and Mia the Amazing, who sails with some Boston Globe guy out of Duxbury.

Mrs. Horn was recognized for her generosity in allowing Hunta Horn to do big-boat cruising in the Caribbean.

Tri-Skipper Barbara Lyons was recognized for pulling down three firsts, and the Captain's Cup, in spite of being continually tripped up by Gordon Hislop and Jim Lyons. One week she sailed and held her own gourmet tack party.

commentary

Mrs. Walsh begged Mrs. Terry (Chris-in-the phone book) Duggan to let her have Mrs. Duggan's party. "No FS auxiliary member in the history of the fleet has ever asked to have a tack party, and/or cleaned her home twice in one month for the Fleet," the award said.

Mrs. Jackson told Skipper Ann Musto: You are the wife all Huntas thought they wanted until you started complaining and mouthing off to them about their male chauvinist pig tendencies. The women of the auxiliary applaud you for your courage, your convictions, your fortitude in putting up with their cute and cutting little remarks."

Mrs. Bartow complemented Mia the Amazing for being "A commuting, four race-a-day sailor, super woman in the car, bathroom clothes changer, Scot launcher and hauler. You're a mega-star, but we wonder if you'll change after you're married," Mrs. Bartow said.

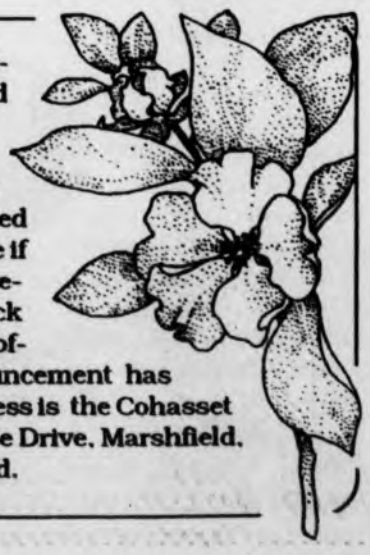
For the first time in the history of the auxiliary, the FS Huntas were recognized. Auxiliary members said later there had never been any need to recognize them before.

Huntas Ray Kasperowicz and Bob Davenport received the Whiners award. Mrs. Jackson and Mrs. Bartow said the Huntas won the award by 2/1000ths of a point, with Huntas Chris Duggan and Rob Henry tying for second, and the rest of the fleet tying for third.

The auxiliary's Hunta the Protester Award went to Hunta Duggan, who protested to his wife, protested to the Fleet captain, protested to the District Commander. The auxiliary said: "While it is true the Hunta gene pool has been diluted over the years, we suppose it is refreshing to observe at least one modern day Hunta acting just like his forbearer, Hunta the Protester in AD 1042."

Mrs. Bartow noted that the auxiliary award board voted to have a man of the '90s award, "but after scrutinizing the fleet, the board discovered that no one really fit the bill. The entire fleet, with one exception, was heard making derogatory statements to and about women.

"Hunta Walsh," Mrs. Bartow said. "We give you this man of the '90s award not for anything you've done, but because none of us heard you bad-mouthing any women this year. So, thanks for nothing."



Mrs. Jackson gave Rick Swanborg the big Skull and Crossbones award, but much of what she said cannot be reported here.

Steve Bartow and Bob Brister received the Eager-Beaver award for being the only boat to show up for the tune-up race. "Of course it's possible Hunta Bartow never told the Huntas about the tune-up race, so he and Hunta Brister could win it," an auxiliary member said. "But it's more likely they're (the Fleet) so vain, they thought they were in tune."

In related news, Flying Scot Captains receiving season awards were as follows: Captain George Wey came in first; Captain Ray Kasperowicz second; Co-Captains Steve Bartow and Bob Brister third; Captain Pete Goedecke fourth and so on and so forth.

Crew Bob Davenport got the Fleet Captain Crew Award. Captain Rick Swanborg got thanked for something.

The Captain's Cup Race winners were as follows: Tri-Skippers Barbara Lyons, Gordon Hislop and Jim Lyons were first; Captain Steve Bartow second, and Captain George Wey third.

The Mariner welcomes engagement and wedding announcements. Accompanying photos are welcome but will not be returned by mail. Please indicate if the photo is to be returned. If so, please pick it up at the Mariner offices after your announcement has been printed. The address is the Cohasset Mariner, 165 Enterprise Drive, Marshfield, MA, Attn: Pat Desmond.

Bobbie Coletti weaves a tradition

By Karen Brown
Special to the Mariner

Bobbie Knutson Coletti considers herself "blessed".

An artist since she was a child, she utilizes her talent as a livelihood.

What is her talent? She paints woodenware buckets and house portraits of homes all over the United States and Canada.

Yet Coletti's career path did not always have an artistic bent.

Although she studied at the Museum of Fine Arts for "a couple of summers" during grammar school, and majored in art at Colby Junior College; winning an art award in 1953, her father wanted her to train in a profession that "made more sense."

So in 1955, Coletti graduated from Forsyth Dental Infirmary and worked as a dental hygienist until she married in 1960.

She stopped working while raising her family, then returned to a job as a hygienist in 1972 on a part-time basis.

During America's bicentennial, the Hingham Historical Society commissioned Jan Brett, a nationally known illustrator and a friend of Coletti's, to portray Old Ship Church on a limited edition of 200 commemorative buckets.

(In the 1800's, the Cushing Pond mill in Hingham manufactured wooden buckets and shipped them "all over New England."

Hingham became known at that time as "Bucket Town."

The mill's foundation remains at the sluiceway between the pond and Crooked Meadow River.)

In early 1978, Coletti bought an unfinished bucket at a craft shop and painted her own home on the cover.

She lived then in an antique New England farm house on Main Street.

A year later she finally left dental hygiene to pursue painting.

She began her artistic career painting buckets but received requests for formal house portraits.

"All I need is people to send me a photograph [of a house]," she said, in order for her to paint a portrait.

She has painted portraits of houses in the Berkshires, New York, Texas, Washington state and even Canada.

Many of her portraits have been of houses put on tour by the Hingham Historical Society.

Her favorite wall paintings are an antique cape on Main Street and a revival mansion on Summer Street.

Today she buys unfinished buckets at Bowl and Board in Hingham Square.

Coletti paints "anything from castles to cottages" on the lids.

The buckets can be gifts for weddings, engagements, births, graduations and retirements.

For the "wedding buckets", Coletti paints the name of the bride and groom, date of the ceremony, and sometimes a portrait of the church where the couple married.

Coletti's work has even been exported.

Upon the centennial of St. John's Church in 1982, Father Robert Edson presented a bucket to the vicar of the Anglican church during a pilgrimage to Hingham, England.

She has received invitations to participate in craft shows.

Currently she is painting a miniature of St. Agatha's Church in Milton on a bucket lid.

This month some of the residents of Ripley Road Nursing Home enjoyed an afternoon out at Kimball's By the Sea.

A total of fifteen residents attended lunch. They were: Alice Clifford, Catherine Gavin, Sarah Nelson, Isabelle Magnussen, Priscilla Thompson, Eva Fulkerson, Theresa Guyette, Isabele Gleason, Dorothy Ripley, Mary Glines, Elizabeth Shepherd, Vera McMonagle, Irene Doyle, Alma White, and Catherine Olson. Lunch was enjoyed by all and we thank Mrs. Harrold, our administrator, MariBeth Butman, and Elizabeth O'Brien for accompanying us, and Kimball's for making it such a delightful afternoon.

Another reason to rejoice and celebrate this month was with the birthdays of Catherine Gavin, Mary Glines, and Priscilla Thompson. Everyone helped to celebrate this happy occasion, especially with the talented help of Mrs. Helen Watson at the piano.

community center news

The Cohasset Community Center for the 1991-92 season plans a continuation of programs offered in past years as well as several innovative courses never before given at the Center.

Our Pre-School Music, Ballet and Gym Dandy classes continue to be our foremost offerings.

As in the previous year, the Duxbury Dance Shoppe led by Shelli Cotta and Michelle Krebs features a Creative Movement class for three and four-year-olds and is an introduction to dance. Children are taught basic large motor skills, the difference and breakdown of the steps, social behavior in the classroom, music and listening skills, and most important—dancing is fun. Classes meet on Mondays and Wednesdays at a cost of $17 per month.

Ages 4 and 5 have the Pre-School Ballet and Tap class which is held on Monday and Wednesday as well. The cost of this class is $22 per month. This class continues the skills of the Creative Movement class and introduces Ballet and Tap as two distinct dance genres. Children learn the difference in music, body movement, and how to creatively express these dances. They also begin more varied and sequential routines.

Ballet and Tap lessons are given for children in Grades K-3 meeting on Mondays at a cost of $22 per month. Beginning Ballet and Tap begins to fine-tune some of the dance steps and motor skills. Children have gained enough control over their bodies to form images with dance. In tap, they form specific sounds and rhythms. Second and third year students learn more advanced steps and routines. Pink ballet slippers and black tap shoes are required. As the children progress into junior, intermediate and third year studies, classes are available at each level.

Gymnastics classes under the expert tutelage of Ruthann Sargent continue to be one of the most popular courses offered. Sargent is a certified gymnast instructor who has been directing the Center's gymnastic program for the past twelve years. The program consists of warm-ups, time on the beam, time on the bar, work on uneven bars, vault, floor exercises aerobic dance and conditioning. The size of each class is small and must be enrolled on a first paid basis. Gymnastic classes will run for a three-month period and will continue throughout the school year. Parents may observe the last class in each session. All classes start the week of Sept. 9, Dec. 2, and March 16. For specific class times and tuition fees, please call the Center.

We continue our pre-school programs for music under the direction of Lynne Ingraham who follows the Kodaly teaching method. There is a Pre-School Music Class for Mom or Dad and Me, grouped by age levels. These courses meet on Tuesdays and Fridays. Please call the Center to ascertain which time slot a child should attend.

Cheerleaders shine during football season

The Varsity Squad consists of three Seniors (tri-captain), one Junior, and four Sophomores for football 1991.

The Squad was picked in June, and since that time, they have been practicing periodically. In July, the girls traveled to Derby Academy and gave a demonstration to the Fine Arts Program.

Five of the eight cheerleaders took the opportunity to go to Cheerleading Camp held at Emmanuel College in Boston. (Rebecca Hackenburg, Lisa Kondrat, Heather Brennock, Becky Callentine, and Aimee Mitchell). During camp the girls worked on the College Military Style cheerleading which Cohasset had never performed before. Also, the girls worked on Chants, Pyramids, gymnastics, and dance routines. Camp was tough, but, they all stuck it out. As a result, at the end of the week, the Cohasset girls were awarded a Trophy for "Most Improved Cheerleaders of the Week" and many awards for excellence and o utstanding performances.

The girls have taken all of the material that they received at camp and are now teaching it to the rest of the squad.

To further their knowledge of the Military Style cheering, Coach Ruthann Sargent held a one day camp at Cohasset High School with BC's Rachel Cruetz. Rachel reviewed the material the girls brought back from camp and added some more new cheers.

Looking forward to seeing you on the football field this season.

Art Center hosts open house

Take a break from back-to-school activities and come to the South Shore Art Center's Open House and Exhibition Reception on Thursday, September 5 from 6 to 8 p.m. The Art Center, located at 119 Ripley Road in Cohasset, will be featuring the Boone/Petit Photography Exhibit in the Bancroft Gallery.

New work by the SSAC Gallery Artists will be on display in the Dillon Gallery while student work from the young artists and adult classes will be featured in the Crossen Gallery and studios. The exhibit, which also features a display by faculty member Clement Micarelli, runs through October 5.

The September 5 Open House is also a great opportunity to register for the new fall term. Many new workshops and courses have been added to both adult and young artist class listings.

Admission to the Art Center's Open House is free. For more information, call (617) 383-9548.

'Mary Kay' to host meeting

Junior Girl Scout Troop #4339 and Cadette Girl Scout Troop #4300 will hold their first meeting on Friday, Sept. 6, 1991 at 7 p.m. in Room #2 at the Second Congregational Church on Highland Avenue.

Their meeting will be hosted by Angela Walsh, representative of Mary Kay Cosmetics. All mothers and daughters will learn about skin care, what colors are right for you, nutrition, etc. For more information call Georgine Butman at 383-2528.

PSO welcomes Charren

Fall meeting date, September 19, 1991. Refreshments, 7 p.m., guest speaker, 8 p.m.

Guest speaker is Peggy Charren of Action for Children's Television (ACT). As president of ACT, a lobbying group she founded 23 years ago with three friends, Charren has been fighting for quality television programming for children since 1968. ACT is largely responsible for "The Children's Television Act of 1990" which compels broadcasters to offer educational and informational programming for children as a condition for license renewal. It also places restrictions on television advertising.

Charren is a dynamic speaker and highly respected in her field. She is knowledgeable and promises to offer advice and information on the topic of TV and children—What it is doing, what it could be doing and what we should do about it. It promises to be an interesting evening. Please join us on Thursday, September 19, at Cohasset High School.

Journalists on next Pierson

On Thursday, Sept. 5, Host Wigmore Pierson's guests on Pierson to Person will be Patriot Ledger correspondent, Molly Hochkepple; Cohasset Mariner Editor, Pat Desmond; Scituate Mariner Editor, Marilyn Jackson; and Cohasset Mariner Columnist, Tanna Kasperowicz.

The Pierson to Person television show is broadcast live each Thursday, 8-9 p.m. from the North Scituate studio of Continental Cablevision. The show airs on Channels 3 and 53 in Cohasset, Hanover, Hingham, Hull, Norwell, and Scituate and on a tape-delayed basis in Marshfield, Weymouth, and Quincy.

The public is invited to be part of the studio audience each Thursday evening and those planning to attend should be at the studio on Gannett Road by 7:30 p.m.

For further information about upcoming guests and additional show information contact the Pierson Show's Executive Producer, Robert Belliveau at 545-0643.

Ginger Merritt will play Alice. Todd Merritt is the White Rabbit. Patricia Brice is the Duck.

Rosemary Martinez is the Queen of Hearts.

The Dodo is Mary Roever. The Gryphon is Steve Holland. Charles Palmer is the Mock Turtle.

Others in the cast are: Lauri Nigra, Caterpillar; Tony Ferris, Tweedle-Dum; Derrick Fleming, Tweedle-Dee; Janine Bradley, Cheshire Cat; Deidre Merritt, Cook; Blanche Clark, the Duchess; John Cahill, Mad Hatter; Jack Armstrong, March Hare; Elizabeth DeLorey, Dormouse; Brandi Brice, Two of Clubs; Julie Holland, Three of Clubs; Sarah Buba, Five of Clubs; Amy Wojtasinski, Nine of Clubs; Alyssa Cosgrove, Four of Clubs; Laura Ferris, Six of Clubs and Larry Loveridge, King of Hearts.

The chorus for the production includes: Brandi Brice, Sarah Buba, Melissa Christino, Alyssa Cosgrove, April Duvul, Laura Ferris, Julie Holland, Heather Johnson, Carrie MacKay, Matthew McLaughlin, Chris Meyer, Alysia Roberts, Heather Seabury, Mark Singleton, Meaghan Sutherland, Rob Sutherland and Amy Wojtasinski.

Art by Doolittle featured

The Artist's Son Gallery, Jonathan Livingston Square, Route 3A, Cohasset, is featuring the newest work by North America's leading artist in print, Beverly Doolittle.

Represented by The Greenwich Workshop, an international art publisher, her newest work, Sacred Circle, focuses on the recurring theme in her art: wilderness and wildlife.

In this work, Doolittle linked nine separate images to tell her story of the Sacred Circle — the symbol of the delicate balance of all living things, including man. The artist says the Sacred Circle "reminds us to understand the world around us and to discover ourselves within that world."

Unique about this print is the goal on behalf of The Greenwich Workshop to raise $1 million to support two organizations' conservation wildlife education efforts. For every print sold, the Workshop is donating $10 of which $8 will go to the National Wildlife Federation and $2 will go to the Canadian Wildlife Federation.

In addition, each print sold will be accompanied by a complementary full-length video titled: "Bev Doolittle, Sacred Circle, Conserving Nature's Delicate Balance," which explores the print's meaning and focuses on environmental concerns.

The Artist's Son Gallery, the South Shore's only authorized Greenwich Workshop dealer, is featuring Sacred Circle and other works by Bev Doolittle through September 30th. The Gallery is open daily Monday through Thursday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., Friday and Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. For more information, call 383-1841.

Art Awareness Day at SSAC

The South Shore Art Center of Cohasset will participate in the second annual South Shore Art Awareness Coalition Open House on Saturday, September 7 from 12 noon to 4 p.m. at the Milton Art Museum. The Art Center, a non-profit institution representing all of the South Shore, is a member of the Coalition, which encompasses many South Shore local and regional art associations.

The Art Center will have a display booth with information about regional art classes, lectures, exhibitions, and art demonstrations at the Open House. The Milton Art Museum is located on the top floor of the Cunningham School building at 44 Edge Hill Road in Milton. For more information about the Coalition and Art Awareness Day, call the Art Center at (617) 383-9548.

Walking program set

Asthma Healthwalkers, a unique, free, self-help group is a walking club for adults with asthma, their friends and family members. Members meet for regular exercise at South Shore Plaza in Braintree, Monday, Wednesday, and Friday mornings and walk as far and as fast as they choose.

The group was formed by Phyllis Ross, who was challenged by chronic asthma symptoms from the age of five. Shortness of breath and fear of the next attack used to greatly limit her daily activities. Today she leads a full and active life, which she credits to an intensive, asthma education program and effective medical management plan. Her goal is to help others with asthma through her work as a health educator and consultant for Massachusetts Respiratory Hospital in Braintree. She is also a member of the board and Chairperson for the Education Committee of the Asthma and Allergy Foundation of America, New England Chapter, located in Chestnut Hill.

She felt the need to develop an exercise program for herself and others who were unable to compete in strenuous sports with people who did not understand the challenges of exercising with asthma. Walking is a popular and safe exercise because one can choose the place and pace of his own activity. For more information please call 784-7594.

It has been estimated that about ten million Americans have asthma. Symptoms vary from mild to severe and can appear seasonally or daily. At one time doctors and parents discouraged those with asthma from exercising because activity seemed to trigger symptoms, such as breathing difficulty, and coughing. Today most people with asthma can learn to control their symptoms with medical management and preventive measures. According to Nancy Hogshead, an Olympic champion with asthma and co-author of the book Asthma and Exercise, "Exercise helps build cardiopulmonary fitness, boosts self-esteem, and improves overall health."

Christmas time is here

The Cohasset Village Fair Committee is well under way. Volunteers are needed. Our next meeting will be held on Monday, Sept. 9 at 7:30 p.m. in the Desmond Room at St. Anthony's Church. Come and join us. Take a sneak preview of the centerpieces for dinner. Call Georgine Butman at 383-2528 or Rose and Chris Kierce. Talk to your church representative on volunteering an hour or two on December 7, Village Fair Day.

Library story hours

Registrations are currently being accepted for fall story hour series at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. The series begins on October 10, and lasts for six weeks. Sessions will be offered at 10 a.m. on Thursdays and Fridays. Each 45-minute program consists of several picture book stories and simple fingerplays, songs and crafts. Children must be at least three and one half to participate.

To register, stop by the Children's Room, or call the children's librarians at 383-1348.

Troop #28 75th Jubilee set

The 75th Diamond Jubilee (1916-1991) Anniversary of scouting will be celebrated Oct. 20, at Kimball's By the Sea, Cohasset Harbor from 1 to 5 p.m.

Invitations have been sent out to many of the former 1000 past and present scouts of Troop #28.

There are former members of Troop #28 for whom we have been unable to obtain addresses. If you have not received an invitation please contact Mary McElroy at 383-0505, Merle Brown at 383-1625 or Linda Farrag at 383-9519.

Art Club for early release days

Wondering what to do with the kids on those early release days this fall? Wonder no more; send them to the South Shore Art Center, 119 Ripley Road in Cohasset. The Art Center has created a Thursday Art Club for grades 1-5 to meet on September 9, October 3 and 24, November 7, and December 5 and 12 from 1:30 to 3 p.m.

Nancy Connolly will help students explore expression and design in a variety of media. The Club promises lots of creative fun for students and one less headache for moms! For information about the Club and the Art Center's Young Artist fall classes and workshops, call 383-9548.

SHARE registration

Registration for anyone interested in participating in SHARE will be held in the Cohasset Community Center on Tuesday, Sept. 10 from 10 a.m. to noon, and on Wednesday, Sept. 11 from 7 to 9 p.m.

SHARE is an innovative community- based program which offers the opportunity to purchase approximately $30-$40 worth of food for $13 in exchange for two hours of volunteer service per month. SHARE is not a government food program. SHARE is for all income levels.

If you are currently involved with any volunteer service to others, or would like to be, give us a call or just come register on one of the registration dates cited above.

The first food distribution date will be Saturday morning Sept. 28 at the Cohasset Town hall. SHARE accepts cash and food stamps at the time of registration.

If you have questions please call Judy Dwyer at 383-1654, Kathy Bryanton at The Council on Aging at 383-9112, or The Social Service League of Cohasset at 383-0771.

They are still looking for strong volunteers for food distribution.

Police union settles contract with wage freeze

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

The town's police force agreed to a wage freeze for the present fiscal year — but the officers will be getting an eight percent raise over the life of the three-year contract.

Selectmen signed the formal agreement Monday. The police union, headed by Paul Laugelle, had already ratified the agreement.

One of the pluses for the police force in the new contract is that in the future beards may be permitted on officers. Under the prior contract beards were not allowed. The new provision gives the police chief the ultimate authority on facial hair.

The selectmen's vote was 4-0 with Selectman Rocco Laugelle abstaining since his son is union president.

Meanwhile the advisory board voted to turn the contract down. While the contract has no financial effect this year, it does affect the budget in the coming years.

The contract will be on the table at the special town meeting slated for Oct. 7. The selectmen's vote on the contract is contingent to town meeting's acceptance.

The police union has been working without a contract since July 1. The new contract will cost the town nothing additional this year.

Patrolmen now earn $28,121 to $30,313 base pay, depending on seniority.

Next July the union will receive a four percent increase bringing the patrolmen's pay up to $29,246 to $31,526.

This is the first time in recent history that a town union has agreed to a contract that provides for a wage freeze.

The police union is the first to sign this year. The personnel board is still working on negotiations with fire, library and town hall workers. The school system is in the process of negotiating with the teachers.

The town firefighters have not had a raise in well over a year since that contract expired last year.

Meanwhile, the selectmen spent more than 30 minutes in closed session with the insurance advisory committee Monday discussing plans for employee health insurance.

(See page 5)

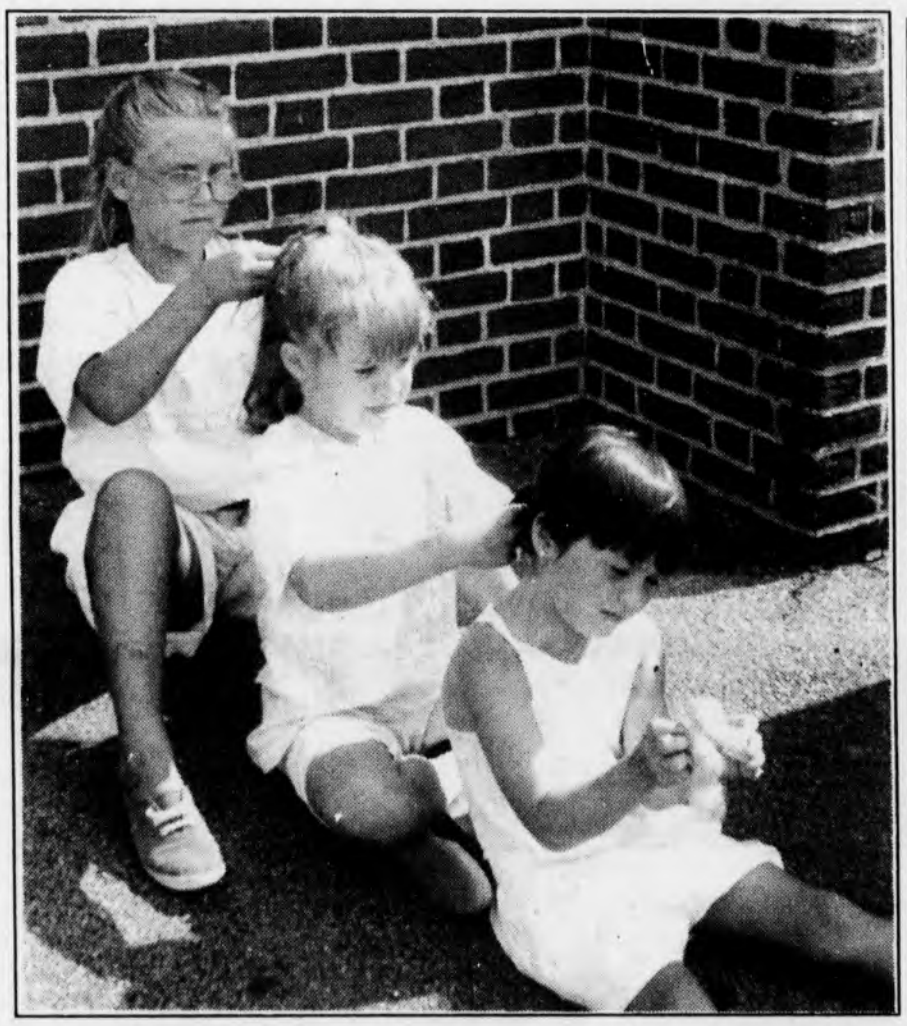
Special TM warrant goes public

The special town meeting warrant may undergo some changes in wording but the 17-plus articles are on the table.

Selectmen accepted the articles for the Oct. 7 special town meeting Monday night. Town Counsel Richard Henderson said some may be ruled illegal or improper between now and the date of the meeting. He suggested immediately that some articles be combined into one. On another article for the assessors, Henderson may suggest splitting the action. The actual wording will be completed by the end of this week.

The main item of business is to balance the town's books. The reduction in state aid will be offset by re-adjusting several items approved by the annual town meeting. In one swoop, voters will be asked to transfer $100,000 from free cash and $87,000 from water department revenues.

A separate article would ask voters to reject the idea of deferring the payment of the last portion of teacher salaries until the following fiscal year. The change in bookkeeping was allowed by the state. In fact, it goes into effect unless a community votes to reject it.



Three zoning articles in the warrant were submitted by petition of more than 100 registered voters. The selectmen pointed out they must accept these articles provided the signatures are certified by the town clerk.

The three articles written by the citizens group SAFE, Stop Any Further Expansion, seek to prevent the growth of the private Cohasset HeightsLandfill, CHL.

Paul Barry, one of the owners of CHL, sat through the meeting until near 11 p.m. Selectman Ned Tebbetts said the merits of the articles were not up for discussion. He said there will be discussion later — most likely at the meeting planned for Monday, Sept. 23. A representative of Norfolk Conveyor, an industrial concern that would also be affected by the possible zoning changes, waited through more than an hour of the meeting before discovering there would be no discussion this week.

The zoning changes proposed by SAFE take several different approaches. One article would change the definition of a structure to include a landfill. This would

Susan Emmer and John Denver

Susan Emmer took John Denver in hand

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

John Denver, the superstar, went on stage at the South Shore Music Circus only after seeing Sohier Street's resident chiropractor Susan Emmer.

He's not the first Circus notable to seek body work from Emmer. He's just the most famous.

Sitting at the desk in her basement floor office, Emmer talked about her approach to health and about Denver.

She found him to be a fine person as well as a health-conscious man.

"He takes good care of himself," Emmer said.

She worked on him just before he got ready for his appearances at the Cape Cod Melody Tent as well as before he went on stage in Cohasset.

"He's aware of what it takes to give his best to the audience. He does it (the body work) so he can give more."

As she spoke there was peaceful music playing in the background of the office.

She said she has been treating performers and crews from the Music Circus for the past few years. It all began when one of Randy Travis band members hurt himself the day before an appearance.

The musician was able to perform.

"After that whenever someone needed care, they call me," she said.

But there is nothing wrong with Devir's back. His care is just a part of his regular practice designed to keep him in shape for his fans.

Once Emmer finished working on the star, he went off to do something he calls vocalizing, which she described as a cross between yodelling and singing.

Emmer has been a chiropractor since 1984. Her office has been located on Sohier Street for the past five years. Upstairs is the home she and her husband, Richard Schmidt, share.

Emmer and Schmidt grew up in the same area in New Jersey but met here in Boston. He was a patient of a Boston chiropractor Emmer worked for at the time.

Coincidence runs through their relationship.

The first song Emmer and Schmidt happened to dance to was Denver's "Annie's Song."

Soon the couple's Sohier Street will be a home shared by a soon-to-be-adopted child. Emmer isn't sure what the child will be named. She is sure it will be a girl.

She's already looking forward to bringing the baby into her practice — not that the baby will offer medical advice.

But having the child nearby will add to the sense of balance Emmer works for in her career and life.

Auditions set for Oct.6,7

The Cohasset Dramatic Club is holding auditions for the Earl Hamner play "The Homecoming." Most will remember these characters from the movie "Spencer's Mountain" and the widely acclaimed television show "The Waltons."

Auditions are at Town Hall in Cohasset on Sunday, Oct. 6 at 3 p.m. and Monday, Oct. 7 at 7 p.m.

There are 22 characters including the mother, father, the oldest son, seven siblings, ages 8 to 17, and various neighbors and grandparents ranging in age from 30 to 70.

Scripts are available at the Paul Pratt library. There are "extra" roles, available for a chorus scene and street scene. For more information call Gayle Varallo, 383-2366. The play will be performed Dec. 14 and 15, at 3 p.m. Dec. 19 and 20, at 7:30 p.m. and Dec. 21 at 3 p.m.

New police appointment

Lisa Matos, the top name on the civil service list for police officer, was appointed to the department Monday on a 4-1 vote.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle voted for Andrew Cesarini.

Matos was the choice of Police Chief Joseph Kealey. She was recently laid off by the Brockton police.

SAFE urges town meeting to adopt new zoning

SAFE recently urged Cohasset residents to attend the Monday, Oct. 7 Special Town Meeting and to support the three zoning bylaw changes which have been proposed by citizen petition. The Town Meeting will be held at 7:30 p.m. at the high school.

SAFE also urged residents to attend the Wednesday, October 2, Public Hearing called by the Planning Board to consider the three Warrant articles. The Hearing will be held at 8 p.m. at the town hall.

"Over 100 Cohasset voters have petitioned the Selectmen to put three zoning bylaw changes on the Warrant for the Special Town Meeting," said John McNabb, Jr., SAFE Vice-President.

"The signatures have been certified by the Town Clerk and have been officially referred by the Selectmen to the Planning Board. Thus, the articles have met all the legal conditions to mandate that they be put onto the Warrant.

"We urge all Cohasset voters who are concerned about the safety of our public water supply to attend the Town Meeting and to support these articles," said McNabb.

"One Warrant article would put a 45 foot height limit on the proposed "Area V" expansion of the Cohasset Heights Landfill, or any other landfill in town by making a landfill defined as a "structure" - which it is.

"This height limit is needed to prevent Cohasset Heights, or any other landfill, from building a mountain of trash which would be visible from Route 3A. The Draft Environmental Impact Report on the proposed expansion plainly states that the garbage landfill will increase the elevation of Scituate Hill by 60 feet or more and will eventually be visible from Route 3A."

"Another Warrant article would change the zoning for the entire "Light Industry" area northwest of Sohier Street and near the Hingham line on Route 3A to Highway Business.

"This change would prevent any future solid waste or light industry in this area, but would still allow a myriad of business uses that would contribute to the tax base and the local economy.

"This change is necessary to prevent any future potentially hazardous uses, such as a garbage landfill or industrial uses which may possibly contaminate Lily pond, the town's public water supply."

"Existing engineering studies of the Cohasset Heights landfill," said McNabb, "show that approximately ten percent of runoff from Scituate Hill, where it it located, flows towards Lily Pond. Any future landfill there, or indeed any future industrial uses which (may use hazardous chemicals) would pose an unacceptable potential threat to our water supply."

"As a potential alternative to this article we also are offering an article which would rezone only a 400-foot wide strip along Route 3A running from Cohasset Knoll to Whitney Woods from Light Industry to Highway Business. This change would prevent any potentially unsightly solid waste or industrial activities from occurring right on the highway, and create a valuable 'buffer zone' to protect the character of this entrance into the town."

"Cities and towns have the right, through zoning," said McNabb, "to prevent certain uses which would be detrimental to the town as a whole. The law also allows citizens of a town to propose and adopt zoning changes at any time. At this town meeting, the voters of Cohasset will have an opportunity to exercise this right and to protect the future of Cohasset."

Oriental rugs are constantly picking up various types of soil. Some are greasy and some are gritty. But they all can eat away at your treasured possession.

For your Oriental rug to retain its beauty and value, it should be cleaned at least once every three to five years.

At Grillo Oriental Rug Cleaning, we carefully examine each rug, then give it the most suitable treatment. Cable guests point out political effects of the economy

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

Wigmore Pierson, host of the Pierson to Person cable TV show, told the four journalists who appeared on his show last Thursday that they were all crazy just minutes before the show went on air.

No one argued with him.

The roundtable consisted of Molly Hochkepple, Patriot Ledger town reporter for Cohasset; Marilyn Jackson, editor of the Scituate Mariner; Tanna Kasperowicz, columnist for the Cohasset Mariner, and me, the editor of the Cohasset Mariner.

Now the evidence does stack up against the possibility of a sane person choosing to get involved in community journalism.

Pierson, who works in cable for love rather than money, asked the guests before the show if money wasn't getting better for the news media.

He was told that the Ledger union recently agreed to go along with a two week unpaid furlough plan to hold down the number of layoffs the paper faced. The union had been willing to give back a third week without pay if the company promised there would be no more layoffs in the coming year. The company couldn't make that promise and the furlough plan held at two weeks.

So was it any wonder that the first on-air question from Pierson involved the regional economy.

No one thought the story was bright. But Jackson, who is also editor of South Shore Business Journal, seemed to offer more hope for an upturn than the others.

All the journalists took issue with Pierson on the question of whether it takes tragedies to make news.

All four newswomen contended that people want to read about good news. Jackson pointed out that the strength of Ted Turner's news channel is that it seeks good news stories, unlike other television news.

"Tragedies are more visual," Jackson said.

The consensus of the group was that people today in the regional are very much concerned about their personal situation and that this "turning inward" is a serious trend that finds itself having an effect in local politics.

Wigmore Pierson and his panel of journalists.

Kasperowicz discussed her pet peeve — the problem of conflict of interest in local politics.

She said it was that issue plus an inspiring letter to the editor Pierson wrote to the Cohasset Mariner that made her decide to begin writing her political humor column for the Cohasset paper.

No one denied there are problems in the area of conflict.

Indeed, I pointed out that it seems to be harder each year to find people willing to run for local office unless they have some vested interest in town government.

Part of the turning inward problem.

The show was the first of the season for Pierson. Tune in Thursdays at 8 p.m. on cable channel 53 to hear more about local issues.

Special TM warrant goes public add height limits not in existence as well as impose other setbacks. Another article would change the entire limited industrial zone near CHL to highway business zone. The third change would rezone a 400- foot strip along Route 3A as highway business and the land in the back would remain limited industrial.

The planning board will hold a public hearing on the three zoning articles at town hall Wednesday, Oct. 2.

There's an article in the warrant for settlement of the police contract. While the new contract actually requires no money this year, the board wants the voters approval for the agreement.

Similar articles are included in the warrant in the event contracts are ready for the fire, library and clerical unions.

Another article seeks $9,000 for Hurricane Bob clean-up costs.

Another article would release a drainage easement on Woodland Drive.

Another article would use $6,500 not needed to remove underground fuel tanks at the police and fire station to remove an oil tank at the high school.

Selectman Diana Kornet was the motivation behind an article to change the date of the annual town meeting. If adopted, the town meeting would be held on the last Saturday in March. The town election would also be moved to the first Saturday in April. The change amounts to having the events a week earlier.

When asked why that article was being considered by a special town meeting rather than by the annual town meeting — since the board's own guidance promoted the idea that only emergency business should be handled at the special meeting — Selectman Jane Goedecke said it was to enable the change to take effect in the coming year.

Several unpaid bills were lumped together. They have a price tag of $21,371.

Another article seeks to rescind the $3,000 expenditure approved by town meeting, but not by the voters in the spring election, to redesign the intersection of King and Beechwood streets.

There's a request for $29,000 for legal costs for the sewer, health and assessors departments. Neither Jane Goedecke nor Ned Tebbetts voted on this article due to a possible conflict.

Police union settles contract with wage freeze

The employees were dropped by Blue Cross because the company did not believe the group was large enough. A meeting between the employees and town officials on the new health plan was scheduled to happen sometime this week.

The town workers remain covered by a health maintenance organization but state law requires that the town offer both types of health insurance.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle, who abstained consistently from any vote involving the police union, stayed inside the selectmen's chambers with the two boards during the closed session.

When asked why later, he had no comment.

But at least one resident said the meeting should have taken place in public since the employees would soon know everything the town has to say on the issue

Her practice involves more than straightening out backs. She uses a holistic approach to medicine, with a heavy emphasis on prevention.

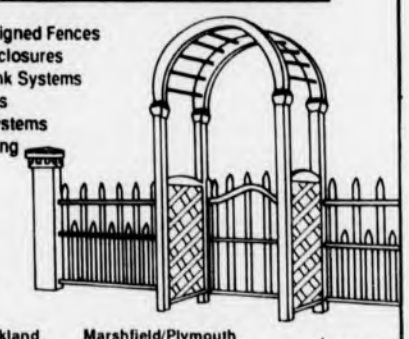
She didn't even believe in chiropractors as a young person. She had worked in the legal field and then turned to the study of nutrition. It was at that point in her life that a car accident left her with back injuries of her own.

"After two years of constant pain, I decided to take someone's advice and see a chiropractor. I didn't want to go. Five weeks later the pain had gone away," Emmer said.

She realized that was what she wanted to do with her life and switched courses, transferring to a chiropracti college.

"What I do is to use the body's energy to heal itself Instead of using pain killers to mask something, th energy goes into healing," she said.

She works with her patients to make them aware o lifestyle issues that can add to their level of stress — and pain.



Her ideas on removing stress take a common sens approach. She may suggest a walk on the beach or a bubble bath.

Soon she will add counselling at Lifeskills in Hanove to her list of credits. She plans to work on homeopathy at the center. Homeopathy is the use of natural remedies like herbs, to work for healing.

Edison President says communication worked

By Marilyn Jackson
Mariner staff

John Carney, president of Eastern Edison for the past 19 months, has weathered many "storm situations" during his 25 years in the utility industry.

But, he says — with some annoyance — it's the first time people have been asking him when was his power restored after Hurricane Bob swept through southeastern Massachusetts.

Carney, who lives in Scituate, said he found his lights on when he returned home from work Wednesday night. That was Aug. 21.

Last week Carney refuted some of the criticism that has been leveled at the power company which serves 17 communities in its Brockton division and five communities in its Fall River division.

"I don't think communication was a problem," said Carney.

He said the company received more than 60,000 calls before, during and after the hurricane.

"Over 92 percent of those calls were answered, and I'll stack that up against anyone," he said.

Carney explained there are two telephone systems in place, one for all the customers and a separate one for emergency communications.

There is a separate consumer service department that interfaces with the community officials, he said.

"That is a private number . . . that was missing in previous storms and previous hurricanes.

"Also, there is an unlisted number for medical priority communications.

RESPONSIVE?

"Are we responsive?" he asked. "We're responsive to the extent we can be . . . but it may not be the expectation of (town) officials.

"Those are the things we need to talk about, and we are very willing to do this.

"When we do have a major hurricane and widespread damage, we can't be everywhere at once.

"We had more than 6,500 wire-down calls. We had staff that went out in company vehicles, and if the wire was live, they stayed there.

But there is no way you can address 6,500 wire-down calls.

"And that leads to frustrations."

Another thing that complicated Eastern Edison's response was calls from customers reporting that a wire was done in front of their house and it was not true.

"We would spend as much time looking where there was no wire down as there was."

Workers would identify that the area was safe and move on.

Carney said in preparation of the storm, Eastern Edison put its own people on alert.

"And we got some private contractors from Pennsylvania that provide line service work.

"We got them on the road early, so they were already en route when the storm hit. Those crews arrived Monday night and we were able to find accommodations for them to sleep.

"It wasn't easy. And they were at locations in Scituate and Norwell ready to go the next morning and make the major push."

Carney said that no utility anywhere, including New York, would release its line crews until the storm passed because they did not know whether Hurricane Bob would veer inland.

"The neighboring utilities had their own problems. There was a lot of frustration. I can see where the problems are, but because of limited resources, we couldn't be everywhere."

TREE DAMAGE

Carney said the "coastal communities" — Scituate, Cohasset, Norwell, Hanover, Pembroke, Halifax, Hanson — sustained a lot of tree damage. "It is a heavily treed area.

"Looking at the entire Brockton division, there was no a community that was unscathed.

"Some came out better than others. There were problems in Easton and Stoughton as well."

Although Carney was working for Massachusetts Electric Company five years ago when Hurricane Gloria swept through the South Shore, he acknowledged that a key problem during that September hurricane was a lack of communication.

"We made a mistake back then. When asked when would power be restored — even before it hit — we said it would take two to three days.

"When it became a week or more, Eastern Edison was harshly criticized by the population for not getting it done.

"At the outset of this storm . . . we said it was going to take a week, maybe more.

"As it turned out, by Thursday night we had less than one percent of our customers remaining without power.

"The issue, at least when we have been talking with people, has been wire-down issues.

"Even though we had a fleet of people out checking, neither the local police and fire departments nor our resources could adequately address the number of wire-downs.

DISCONNECTING SERVICE

"That was the reason to disconnect service."

Carney said he was trying to bring local officials together with Eastern Edison representatives to address local concerns. The hurricane season does not end until November.

Carney said he will not know for several weeks just how much the hurricane cost the utility.

There was very little damage to bulk transmissions lines, but the major substations were severely damaged, according to Ruth Stetson, a spokesman for Eastern Edison.

She said the company was able to switch back to normal procedures at 10 p.m. Friday, Aug. 23.

Eastern Edison is only one of three retail electric companies within Eastern Utilities Associates. The other two are Blackstone Valley Electric Company in Lincoln, R.I., and Newport Electric Company in Newport.

The company also owns a generating plant in Somerset — Montaup Electric Company — and purchases by contract some electricity from other power plants such as Pilgrim, Seabrook, Yankee Rowe, Millstone in Haddam, Conn.

Eastern Edison also is tied into the New England Power Pool.

In response to Hurricane Bob, Eastern Edison relied on its mutual agreement with other Northeast utilities.

As a result, 20 tree-trimming crews were brought in from Philadelphia, three line crews from Halpin company in Hingham and 19 line crews from Niagara-Mohawk in upstate New York.

In addition, Hinkel and McCoy sent 13 crews from New Jersey, and New York State Electric and Gas Company sent eight crews from Rochester.

Commuter boats hit by a new wave

The two boat companies offering commuter service from Hingham to Boston are trying to stay afloat this week after the state budget crunch hit them in the cash register.

But the sign of the times is: Reduced service.

Some people may get some benefit from the stiffer competition.

Massachusetts Bay Lines, which operates the Massachusetts, reacted to the loss of its MBTA subsidy this week by cutting fares as a way of increasing the number of riders.

The price of a one-way ticket is $3, with coupon books on sale offering 10 rides for $25. Last week the price of a one-way fare was $4 and the 10-ride coupons cost $34.

The other boat company — Boston Harbor Commuter Service — which still has a MBTA subsidy continues to sell rides to Boston for $4 each, with 10-ride coupon tickets for sale at the $34 price.

The company that lost the MBTA subsidy has taken measures to cut its costs.

William Spence of Massachusetts Bay Lines said the other boat his company used to run from Hingham to Boston is up for sale. The Gracious Lady, the faster of the two commuter boats, can be purchased for $375,000, according to Spence.

Spence doesn't believe the lower fares will work in the long term.

What he does say he expects is that the increased competition will increase his numbers for now. That will give him time to keep the operation from sinking.

Can he continue to operate at the lower fare?

"You do need a subsidy to operate in the long term. But we have expenses that go on anyway. It's better to operate and keep the employees."

Will he take legal action against the MBTA since he has had a contract with the agency?

"Right now I'm concentrating on trying to get riders," Spence said.

Would he call this a boat war.

"I'd call it competition," Spence said.

For the present time, the numbers look good for Mass. Bay Lines.

The company offers excursion and charter boating in addition to the commuter service. But the high times are always in the warm season.

Last week Boston Harbor Commuter Service began operating a new boat to Boston — the Majestic Princess. The MBTA backed a new advertising campaign for the service which it still underwrites.

Reports indicate the numbers are somewhat down on the subsidized service.

Boston Harbor Commuter Service receives $16,500 a day to run its boat service to Boston. This breaks down to $3,300 per boat for the five boats.

"Last year we were subsidized less than $6,000 a day to operate the two boats," Spence said. "The T sees this as a savings but what's happened is the service has been reduced. There were six boats under subsidy last year. Now there are five."

Dana Godell of Boston Harbor Commuter Service was unavailable for comment as the Mariner went to press Wednesday.

around town

• We must begin with a story about a great gal that "thought she could," Ellen Malloy. Ellen recently played in the Club Championship at the Cohasset Golf Club against Melissa Browne-Hobson. Ellen won the Championship on the 19th hole after being seven down at the end of ten holes. That's what you call a prime example of not giving up, and we salute you for your supreme efforts Ellen.

• Boy Scout Troop 28 is celebrating the 75th Anniversary of Cohasset Boy Scouting. There are more than 1,000 past and present residents of Cohasset who have contributed to and benefitted from their association with scouting. The Troop is planning an afternoon of reminiscences, acknowledgements and renewed camaraderie Sunday, Oct. 20 at Kimballs-By-the-Sea from 1 to 5 p.m. The troop is also highlighting the Troop 28 Memorial Scholarship Fund that was established in 1986 in remembrance of the late Barbara Pape, a strong supporter of the Troop. Since then one or more annual scholarships have been awarded each year to Cohasset Boy Scouts and Explorers who continue to actively support Troop/Post 28 through graduation from high school. They agreed to solicit contributions every fifth year, and your tax deductible contributions may be sent to Troop 28 Memorial Scholarship at the Cohasset Savings Bank, Attn: Robert Magner, 13 Elm St., Cohasset, MA 02025.

• We had an opportunity to go to a unique and beautiful gift shop last week, The Barn, located on 3A almost at the Scituate line. What a beautiful building, filled with such splendid items. There is beautiful art work, including a lot of Linda Cuff's work (wonderful indeed). There is also a children's section upstairs, with lots of fun ideas. If you need a gift for yourself or someone else, please keep The Barn in mind, you will have such fun browsing, and get some great ideas to boot.

• When you see Charlie Stover beaming from ear-to-ear "around town," you'll now know why. Charlie had the year-book dedicated to him last year and he is so proud of the fact. Charlie does so much for everyone, quietly and with efficiency, he adores the students, and he manages to have fun while working. We approve of the class's choice, and we congratulate you Charlie.

• Here's some news for you flea market fans; the Cohasset Community Center is planning to hold its 4th annual giant Flea Market on the Common on Saturday, Sept. 28 from 9 to 3 p.m. Table space for the Flea Market is $25 for a 6 x 10 area. This is a great opportunity to sell your unwanted treasures at an organized and well-attended event. The Pancake Breakfast will take place at the Center from 8 to 10 a.m. to kick the day off. Tickets are $4 for adults, $2 for children and $3 for seniors. Plan your Saturday around this event.

• Speaking of pancake breakfasts, the soccer teams are planning their annual breakfast for Sept. 15 at the Deer Hill School from 9 a.m. to noon. Tickets are $3. See any member of the varsity team or buy them at the door, either way be sure to attend. This is the only fundraiser that the team will conduct this season, so be sure to lend your support and get a yummy breakfast in the process.

• Congratulations go to Michael and Elisabeth Libby this week; they had a baby girl on Aug. 21 at South Shore Hospital. Enjoy your brand new baby daughter, they are such fun.

• The only good thing about the Patriots' loss last Sunday is that Paul Farron's team won. Paul has been on the Cleveland Brown's team for a long time now, and he was highlighted in all of the local papers. Another proud moment for our town, as Paul began his football career right here.

Sarah Malone, 2, had a great summer.

• Speaking of football, isn't it nice to know there will be football games again this year? After taking a year off to rebuild, the numbers are getting stronger again, so this year promises to be a successful one. We sure wish them every success, see you there.

• Happy belated birthday to Jeannine Pompeo Coburn. We know that having that baby to help you celebrate made the day a perfect one.

• The Cohasset Chamber of Commerce is packaging their Student Packages that they send to the college freshmen again this year. This project is an unqualified success; the students love them and their fellow dorm-mates are always green with envy. Let them know how much they are appreciated, and be sure to support them by shopping locally.

• Finally, we congratulate Rick and Meg (McCullough) Maeher on their wedding that look place last Saturday. It was a wonderful service, followed by a beautiful reception at Hatherly Country Club. Here's to a long and happy life to you both, may you be blessed.

• Please call me with your latest newsworthy event. Ours for the week is that our granddaughter, Kelsie, is two years old this week. Happy birthday to the prettiest, sweetest, smartest girl I know (another proud grandmother speaking).

chamber chatter

A few weeks ago my daughter asked me to bring her to Hanover Mall to buy new stoppers and wheels for her Roller Blades. When I asked if she had checked with Good Sport, she just smiled and picked up the phone.

She has become used, you see, to my suggesting that she check with Cohasset stores before trudging off to spend her money in Hanover or Kingston. And as long as the object of the exercise was purchasing, as opposed to socializing, she has actually been grateful to get her shopping done here in town.

I suggested the same course of action to her friend when she was looking for the best price on a field hockey stick. It had never occurred to her to check here in town as well as in Hanover and Quincy. I think she thought that I worked for New England Telephone's ad agency.

And sometimes I do feel like the commercial — "You could have called first." But is saves so much time just to pick up the phone and call a Cohasset business or store before schlepping all over the South Shore or Boston to find one little item. And then I don't have to worry about seeing the same item, the one that I just spent four hours searching for, sitting in the window of a store right here in town.

If you have a little lead time, many of the retail businesses will even special order or hand craft the very item that you have your heart set on.

Buttonwood Books and Toys, Cohasset Jewelers, King Jewelers, Hassan Woodcarving, Cards and Shards are just a few of the businesses that will go out of their way to satisfy your needs. Cohasset Hardware has saved many a birthday or Christmas by ordering a special tool or gardening item for me, and Cohasset Music rode to my rescue last Christmas by not only finding the record set that I needed, but by having it delivered on time.

So, to paraphrase another famous ad — "Try us . . . You'll like us!" Shop Cohasset We're here for you.

A second thought: Don't forget to stop into the new expanded Consignment Shop (run by the Social Service League) in Cushing Plaza. Same friendly people, same great merchandise — just more of everything. And coming soon will be a bridal salon. Stop in and see what's going on.

community center news

The Cohasset Community Center for the 1991-92 season plans a continuation of programs offered in past years as well as several innovative courses never before given at the Center.

Our Pre-School Music, Ballet and Gym Dandy classes continue to be our foremost offerings.

As in the previous year, the Duxbury Dance Shoppe led by Shelli Cotta and Michelle Krebs features a Creative Movement class for three and four-year-olds and is an introduction to dance. Children are taught basic large motor skills, the difference and breakdown of the steps, social behavior in the classroom, music and listening skills, and most important—dancing is fun. Classes meet on Mondays and Wednesdays at a cost of $17 per month.

Ages 4 and 5 have the Pre-School Ballet and Tap class which is held on Monday and Wednesday as well. The cost of this class is $22 per month. This class continues the skills of the Creative Movement class and introduces Ballet and Tap as two distinct dance genres. Children learn the difference in music, body movement, and how to creatively express these dances. They also begin more varied and sequential routines.

Ballet and Tap lessons are given for children in Grades K-3 meeting on Mondays at a cost of $22 per month. Beginning Ballet and Tap begins to fine-tune some of the dance steps and motor skills. Children have gained enough control over their bodies to form images with dance. In tap, they form specific sounds and rhythms. Second and third year students learn more advanced steps and routines. Pink ballet slippers and black tap shoes are required. As the children progress into junior, intermediate and third year studies, classes are available at each level.

Gymnastics classes under the expert tutelage of Ruthann Sargent continue to be one of the most popular courses offered. Sargent is a certified gymnast instructor who has been directing the Center's gymnastic program for the past twelve years. The program consists of warm-ups, time on the beam, time on the bar, work on uneven bars, vault, floor exercises aerobic dance and conditioning. The size of each class is small and must be enrolled on a first paid basis. Gymnastic classes will run for a three-month period and will continue throughout the school year. Parents may observe the last class in each session. All classes start the week of Sept. 9, Dec. 2, and March 16. For specific class times and tuition fees, please call the Center.

We continue our pre-school programs for music under the direction of Lynne Ingraham who follows the Kodaly teaching method. There is a Pre-School Music Class for Mom or Dad and Me, grouped by age levels.

editorial

Let's hear some loud praise for reasonable people

The new contract for the police union gives the officers no raise this year.

Indeed, it does offer four percent raises in 1992 and 1993. But for the first year, the contract offers only the possible hope that an officer might grow a beard — if he or she could come to terms with the police chief about it.

The town has no money set aside for raises for any of its employees this year. Last spring the override allowed some spending beyond the limits of Proposition 2 1/2. But the voters chose to use the menu approach to make it clear that raises were not part of the higher package.

The police union is the first to settle with the town this year. School teachers, firefighters, clerical employees and librarians are all working without new contracts.

Actually the firefighters contract ran out more than a year ago.

Last spring Arne Gjesteby, advisory board chairman, suggested the only way the town could avoid layoffs was if the unions agreed to a wage freeze.

His comments made headlines at the time. Still it didn't seem a possible solution back then.

Negotiations proceeded between the personnel board and the police union.

The resulting contract is something the town can actually afford.

Now the advisory board is opposed to the police contract. We understand there are raises in future years. We happen to believe the police union was reasonable and wise in looking to the long-term picture.

In these days of tough economic times, it is a blessing to have a job. We're delighted the police union understood the difficulty of the financial times and gave the town a break. In the end, of course, it gave its own members a break.

Paul Laugelle, president of the police union, and the rest of the men and women who supported the new contract deserve the town's respect and admiration.

They are people with a sense of reality. They are people who can look toward a long-term picture. They are people who obviously care about the job-security of their brother and sister officers.

The personnel board, also, deserves some credit. Few people expected the bargaining process to work well when the town had so few chips to play.

The selectmen, who signed the contract Monday night, also deserve a pat on the back.

(Selectman Rocco Laugelle abstained from voting since his son is the union president.)

The selectmen were smart enough to vote on the matter — although it wasn't listed on the agenda. While the board members hadn't seen the papers before the meeting, they were all aware of the percentage figure in the contract.

The finals papers arrived in the selectmen's office within three hours of the meeting time.

It seems to us this is a perfect example of a win/win situation. Jobs are preserved and town spending held to previous levels.

We want to acknowledge everyone involved.

Bring back the days of neighbor helping neighbor

To the Editor:

As your Senator, I am very aware how the economic recession has affected everyone in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. We no longer can take for granted the jobs which a few years ago were plentiful.

Families now struggle each and every day to survive and to provide food, shelter and clothing, especially those families on welfare.

As a newly elected Senator, the burden has fallen upon my shoulders to make decisions which affect individuals and the Commonwealth in general.

This year's budget is balanced for the first time in seven years. However, the budget ax fell in many areas, including the clothing allowance for children receiving welfare.

I, as your elected State Senator, cannot absolve myself from providing some sort of assistance to the families who were receiving this funding. First, I have compiled a list of free clothing outlets, thrift and consignment shops for those affected.

Secondly, I implore everyone in our District to gather any unwanted clothes and donate them. Let's bring back the days where neighbor helped neighbor.

Anyone interested in finding the nearest location to donate clothes or a place to find low priced clothes, please call my office at 722-1646.

Speckled Birds

By Priscilla Daniels

How like them not to notice the sky that blackens momentarily over this stretch of narrow spared beach rumbling for miles

The sandpipers run in and out of the spume of these ebbing waves never mindful of the tides
as they rise and fall

With eyes wide and concentrating they probe with slender beaks the multi-colored grains that drain beneath their feet

They are engrossed silly birds (in a kind of frenzy perhaps) searching for something something in the sand

Residents urged to vote for future of the town

letters

To the Editor:

Cohasset stands at a crossroad. Together, we have a choice to make at the Oct. 7 Special Town Meeting. We can choose to vote in favor of protecting our water supply by rezoning an area of the Town. Or, we can choose to do nothing.

Over 100 Cohasset voters have petitioned the Selectmen to place three SAFE-sponsored Zoning Bylaw changes on the Warrant for the Town Meeting. One of these articles will rezone the entire "Light Industry" area northwest of Sohier Street to "Highway Business," and thus prevent any further use of that land for garbage disposal, solid waste or light industrial uses, and will by itself stop the proposed 27.5 acre "Area V" expansion of the Cohasset Heights Landfill. (A map showing this area is on file at the Town Clerk's office.)

Engineering studies have shown that approximately ten percent of runoff from that area flows towards Lily Pond, and thus poses a potential threat to our water supply. Rezoning this area will help prevent any similar future threat.

A town like Cohasset has the power, and the right, through zoning, to protect its residents from potentially damaging land uses. The law also allows citizens, at any time, to propose and adopt zoning changes.

Cohasset voters, in the unique New England form of direct democracy known as the "open town meeting," each have the power and the opportunity to make this choice for ourselves, in person, on October 7.

Direct democracy is a rare and powerful form of government which provides actual "people power" and which allows the clearest expression of the will of the people, but which is wasted unless it is exercised by the voters.

I urge each and every Cohasset voter to attend the Monday, Oct. 7 Special Town Meeting (7:30 p.m. at the High School) and to vote for the future of our Town.

Days of awe fulfill promise

By Richard Small
Mariner staff

commentary

On Sunday night, Sept. 8, the Days of Awe began — ten days when Jews around the world celebrate the New Year 5752 and commemorate the seven days of Creation. This special period culminates with self-reflection and prayer on the holiest of days...Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement.

It is a time to contemplate actions of the past year, to forgive others and to seek forgiveness for one's own transgressions...major and minor.

The Book of Life is now open. Whether this is taken literally or symbolically, it is taken seriously.

Just a few years back, Pope John Paul II, while participating in Services at the main Synagogue in Rome, referred to Judaism as the "Elder Brother."

How fitting. Judaism is not only the first of the Biblical faiths, it is the foundation upon which both Christianity and Islam are built.

In our world of misunderstandings one of the longest standing misapprehensions has to do with how the younger brothers view their elder brother.

Jews have always understood that their description as "the chosen people" was not an endorsement of any individual Jew. No human soul is worth more than any other. It is rather an affirmation of the fulfillment of a major clause in the Covenant between Abraham and God.

God entered this contract with Abraham because he alone, among men of his time, accepted through the gift of faith the kingship of the one true invisible God.

'..in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed.' (Gen. 12:3)

For his part of the commitment, Abraham was "chosen" to bring to all humanity the word of God. The vehicle for this task was to be his progeny. Hence the notion of "chosen people."

On the other side of the contract, the Lord was to make a great people of Abraham's descendants.

Have both sides kept this covenant?

Despite unspeakable adversities in many times and places, the Jewish people have kept faith with Abraham's promise. Furthermore, Jews believe that all people are the children of God. You don't have to be Jewish to be beloved of the Creator, who has his own purpose with all faiths. As another Jew noted, "There are many rooms in my father's mansion."

Has the word of God via the Bible reached all peoples? Yes, if you understand that the Jewish Scripture is the basis for both the New Testament and the Koran. In this sense the word has spread through the three branches of the Biblical family tree to each corner of the earth. People of every race, heritage and description are now part of Abraham's Covenant.

Has God kept his word to Abraham? Are his children a great people? Of course, especially when the family is properly conceived in all its variety to include Christians and Moslems.

In time the elder brother and the younger brothers will embrace in the shared love of the one God and their common lineage through the Patriarch Abraham. In that time peoples of all other traditions will be treated as brothers and sisters too.

When that day comes the Covenant will achieve its ultimate fulfillment...May it not be far off.

Rotary will dance for #50

The Cohasset Rotary Club celebrates the start of its second 50 years with a dinner dance at the Community Center Saturday, Oct. 5, from 7 p.m. to midmight.

Plans are well underway for the event and several hundred members and friends are expected to join in the festivities, according to Catherine Dwyer, the member charged with handling the club's publicity.

Rotary was chartered back in March of 1941.

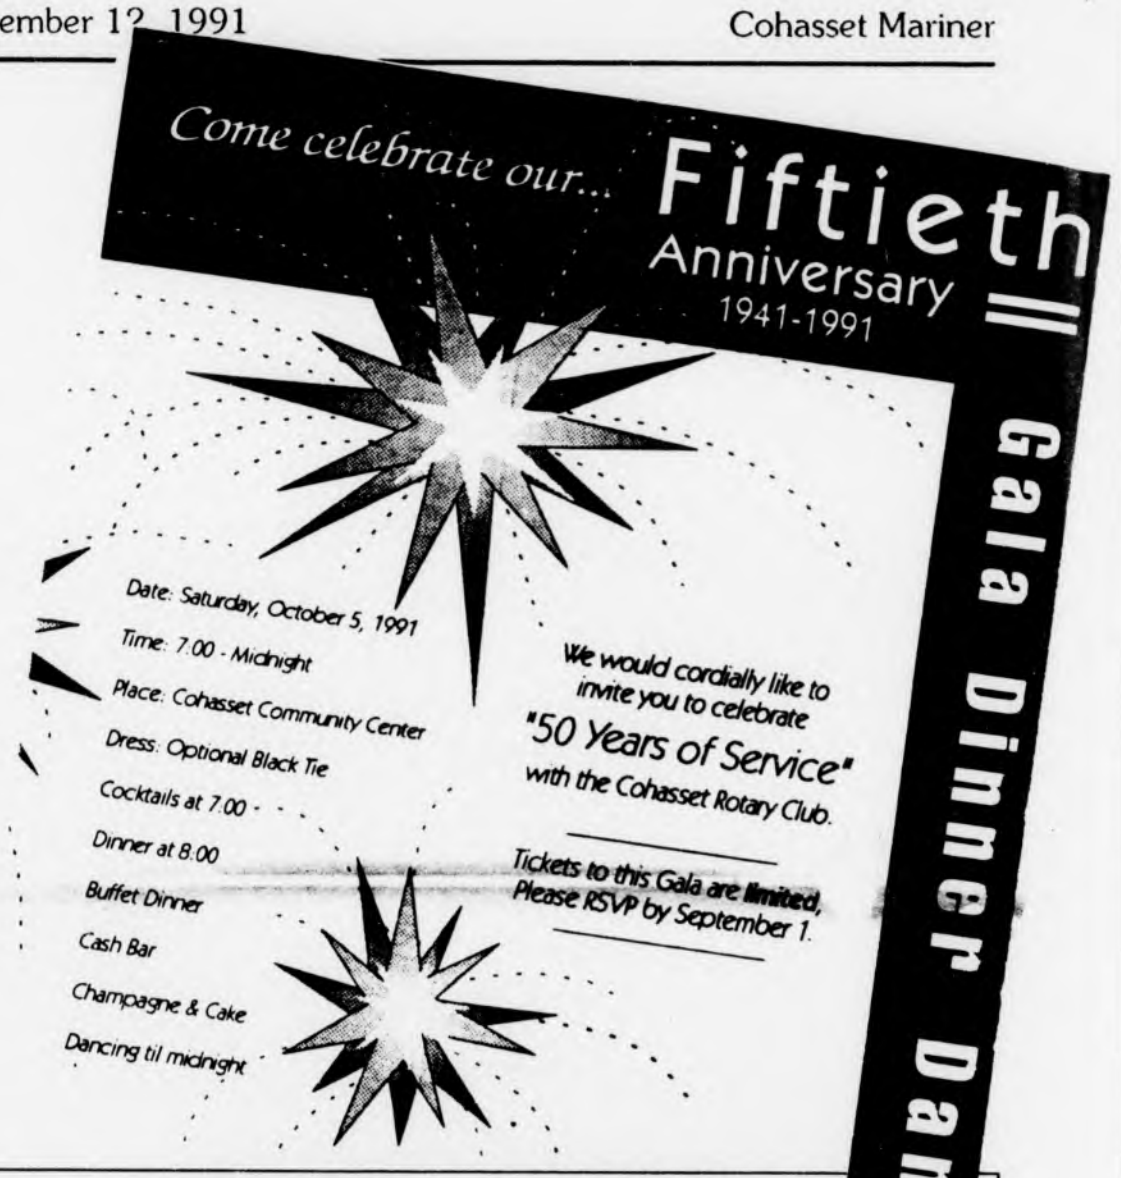
During World War II, Rotary sent local newspapers to the town's servicemen, according to the history written by Burtram Pratt.

When the war ended, it was Rotary that sponsored a "welcome home" dinner at town hall for the returning servicemen.

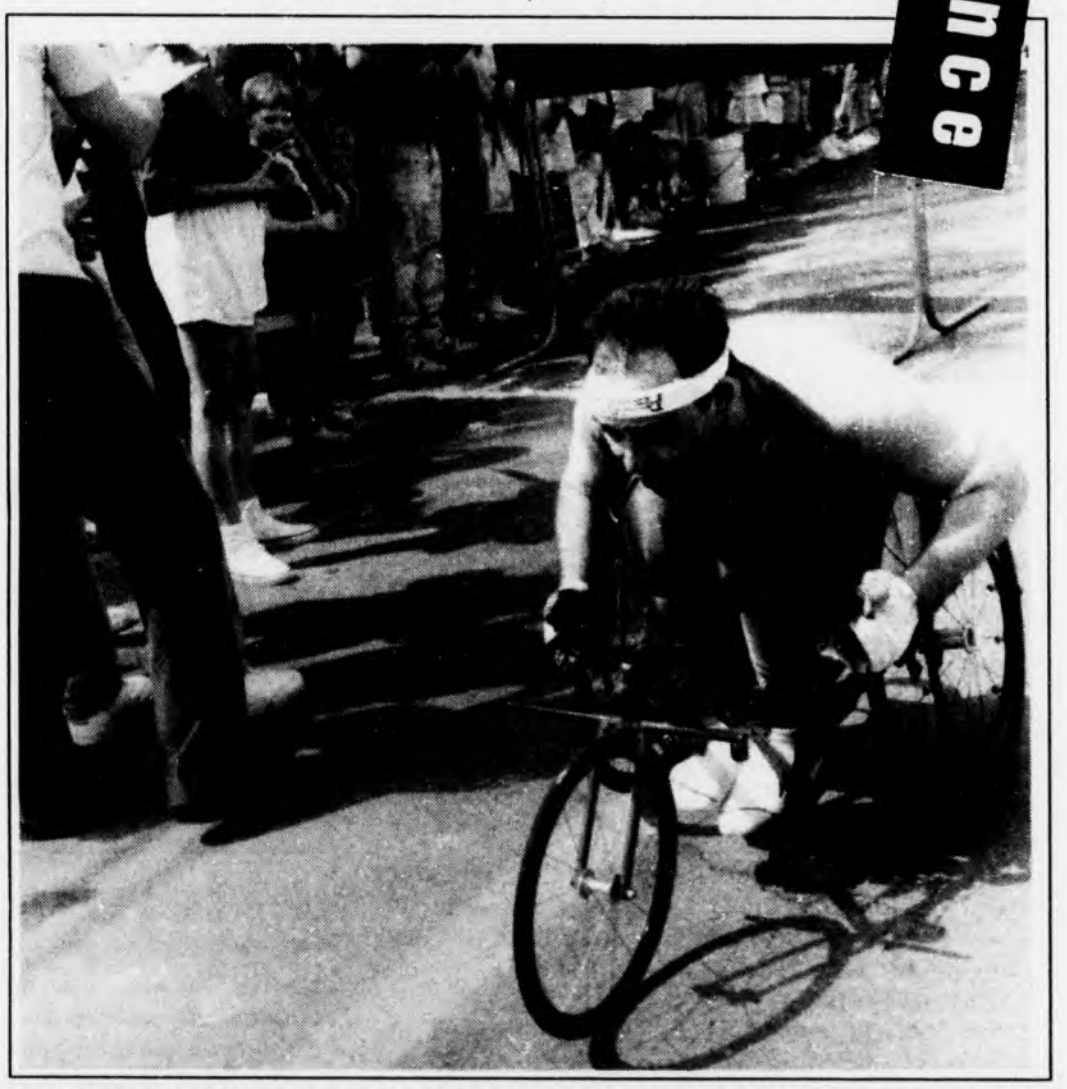
Originally the club members discussed holding a spring time dance — but there is a limit to the amount the 30 members of Rotarycan tackle at any one time. The priority for the spring was the organization of the annual Cohasset Road Race-By-the-Sea.

The summer priority was the pancake breakfast developed for the Harborfest. Usually the main event of the fall is the club auction. Then the group begins work on the telephone book.

So now the members can concentrate on creating a social event suited to honor the club's golden anniversary.



Rotary is a service club. The local Rotary sponsors hefty scholarships for college students as well as making contributions to local charities in manpower and money. Among the donations made so far this year was a gift to the proposed War Memorial and that of a tree in the courtyard of the high school. The group also contributes to international charities as well.



The Cohasset club was sponsored by the Hingham Rotary at the start. There's a picture on the wall of the Bates Building that shows a huge banquet at the Osgood School back in 1941 when the charter was delivered.

The local Rotary Club is part of the international organization founded in 1905 by Paul Harris, a midwestern businessman. Harris formed the organization as a way of getting together with some other businessmen to talk over the things they had in common. Soon the charitable part of the group took root and the idea of the club spread.

Rotary gathers once a week for a Monday night dinner at the Bates Building.

Those interested in obtaining tickets to the dinner dance can call Austin Lyne at 383-6550, Catherine Dwyer at 383-1090 or Noel Collins at 383-2223.

Leo's Hockey Tigers defeated by Hingham 5 to 3

By John Kinchla

Cohasset's youngsters Pat Reynolds, Chris McKenna, Anthony Wigmore, Matt Graves, Mike Shields, Brendan Kinchla, Kevin McKenna and Anthony Wigmore played hard throughout this contest but Hingham refused to yield to Leo's aggressive Tigers.

Finally, 11th grader, Charlie Smith, playing in his first game of the season, scored. Smith then scored again. The Smith to Brendan Kinchla combination heated up for another goal before the Tigers fell silent.

The Tigers concluded their summer season with a 3 to 7 record and had to settle for seventh place in the 10 team Pilgrim Arena program.

The team experimented out of necessity. Seventh grade goaltender, Kevin McKenna was drafted into varsity service. Kevin joined brother Chris in giving the team their fourth brother combination. Kevin continues to improve with every game. Other brothers on the team are Pat and Mike Reynolds, John and Brendan Kinchla and Mike and Charlie Shields.

Local player seeded in National 85s

Senior Joe Horak of Cohasset played singles and doubles in the USTA National Men's 85 Grass Court Championships during the week of Sept. 3-7 at the Longwood Cricket Club in Chestnut Hill. Horak was the number 4 seed in this USTA-sanctioned event for players 85 and over, now in its fifth year.

Twenty Superseniors from ten states played competitive tennis and enjoyed a full week of socializing with old friends. Along with them, close to 100 other seniors competed in several events as part of the James Rogers Challenge Bowl for players over the age of 70, begun in honor of Rogers' 70th birthday twenty years ago. Rogers, now 90, played doubles this year and is resisting the pressure to establish a National 90s event.

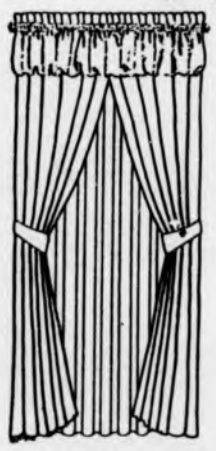
Superseniors' events have gained in popularity, and include several other championships during the year on clay, hardcourt and indoors. Matches usually are free and open to the public.

Hurricane repairs will be permitted

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers' New England Division has issued an Emergency General Permit for the repair or replacement of previously-permitted structures or fills damaged or destroyed by Hurricane Bob.

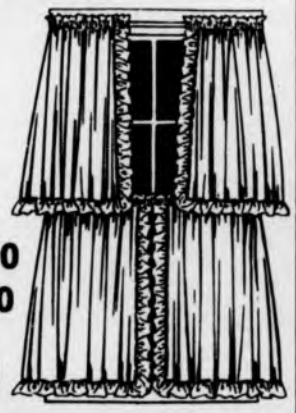
The authorization, which is valid until Nov. 19 covers both shorefront and inland facilities.

"Many marinas and private docks and floats suffered severe damage by the high winds which accompanied Bob's trek through the region. The Emergency Permit will allow facilities damaged by the storm to be repaired or replaced [in kind] after verbal notification to our office without undergoing a full-scale public interest review by the Corps," according to Colonel Philip R. Harris, head of the Army Engineers in New England.



In addition to structures (piers, docks and floats), the emergency permit also authorizes the placement of temporary for fill for cofferdams, access roads, etc., to facilitate repair. These temporary fills must be removed immediately upon completion of the repair work.

To be covered by the emergency permit, property owners must notify the Corps of Engineers of the extent and nature of the emergency work by calling the Regulatory Division, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, 424 Trapelo Road, Waltham, MA 02254-9149, telephone 647-8338. The owner must also contact appropriate state and local agencies regarding the need for other approvals.



For further information regarding the emergency permit, call Christine Godfrey at 647-8673.

China trip provides a primitive charm

(Editor's note: Normally, as our readers know, we are scrupulous about printing only local news in The Mariner. However, exceptions make the rule. Judy Enright is editor of the Norwell and Hanover Mariners. We hope you have as much fun reading about the adventures as she did writing about them and if you ever have a chance to go to China, we hope you'll grab it.)

By Judy Enright
Mariner staff

"Ladies and gentlemen, Northwest Airlines welcomes you to The Peoples' Republic of China," the pilot chirps as his 747 touches down on Shanghai's runway at 9:10 p.m.

A chill went down my spine. China? It was impossible; probably just a dream.

It had been a very long day — or several of them — and most of us had totally lost track of time although we were told it was by then a full 24 hours since we left Boston. My travel day had started at 4:45 a.m.; an hour when only a true friend would pick you up for a 7:30 a.m. flight to Chicago. Others who lived farther from Logan probably started their day even earlier.

The longest leg of the flight, Chicago/Tokyo, did not get off to an especially auspicious start. As we glided down the runway, the pilot aborted the takeoff and cruised back to the terminal. A "warning horn" had sounded, he said. That was about 10:30 a.m. We finally left shortly after 2 p.m. — in the same plane. That was not a great start for someone who would rather do almost anything than fly?

But, the flight from Chicago to Tokyo was incredibly smooth and there was daylight all the way. We passed over Alaska's breathtaking glacier fields and photographed Mt. McKinley. We also lost a day somewhere en route but regained it coming back.

There were two movies just between Chicago and Tokyo and more meals and snacks than we could begin to count. On the return trip (Hong Kong-Tokyo-Chicago-Boston), one passenger commented, "Do you realize that this is the third breakfast we've had today?" And, it was.

SHANGHAI

After a lengthy wait, the mandatory hassle at customs and the first of many Chinese queues, we stepped from the terminal into the misty Shanghai night in search of our bus. In front of us lay a scene straight from a Humphrey Bogart movie. There was something so totally mystical and oriental about it from that very first minute.

Halos of light enshrined street lamps in the drizzle as laborers worked on an airport expansion despite the late hour. There is no true rush hour in China, we were told, because there are shifts that work around the clock and people come and go all the time — primarily by bicycle, the major mode of transportation.

DR. HERB

We were escorted on our travels through China by a most interesting and cultured young man, Dr. Herbert Fong, who was provided by the tour operator, Pacific Delight. Herb, a San Francisco resident, met us in Shanghai and stayed with us until our return to Tokyo two weeks later. He had just been in China the week before, he said, with another tour.

Herb is a sixth generation Chinese-American who holds a Ph.D. in ancient Chinese literature from Stanford. His insights into the culture and art of the country were invaluable and, perhaps best of all, he had a great sense of humor and spoke and understood good old American English which was a lifesaver on more than one occasion.

We were provided with a national guide who stayed with us for the entire trip and with a local guide in each city, but those guides had learned their English in school as a second language and often missed the nuances of our phrases and terminology.

It was often possible throughout China to make yourself and your mission understood, even though there was not a word of Chinese in your vocabulary. However, when one tour member had a problem with constipation, we were baffled.

In a shopping mall near the hotel, we saw a shop that indicated that it sold pharmaceutical type items.

"Do you have laxatives?" I asked the salesgirl.

Blank stare.

I wrote the word "laxative" on a piece of paper.

Blank stare.

My mind raced, frantically trying to come up with some other word that would get the message across.

Aha. "W.C.," I wrote on the piece of paper. "This," I said, pointing to the word laxative, "makes you go here," I added, pointing to "W.C."

"Ah," she said knowingly and nodded her head.

At last, I thought. That was a little tough, but it worked. I am such a clever soul with my foreign translations.

The girl took me over to a nearby case and pointed to a stack of boxes that said, "Love Potion."

"Uh, no thanks," I mumbled, hoping the other members of the tour in the same shop hadn't witnessed my demise.

When I told the story to my traveling companion, who had stayed behind at the hotel, she couldn't stop laughing and she couldn't believe that I hadn't bought a few boxes. What a great gag gift, she said, or just the right thing to leave out on the coffee table when the ladies of the church auxiliary dropped around for tea.

We looked everywhere but never saw love potion again. We even tried to give a good-humored doctor on our trip the mission of finding some for us but no luck.

PEKING OPERA

One night — at the end of a very long and strenuous day of touring — we visited the production of an art form called Peking Opera.

Many in the audience, which seemed to be primarily comprised of tourists, fell asleep. It was hot and stuffy in the theater and the seats were not especially comfortable. Most of us left after a very short culture exposure but a few hardy souls stayed behind and had wonderful tales to tell the next day about trying to get back to the hotel. (Many hotels provided guests with cards that said in Chinese: Please take me to the whatever hotel.)

The singing at the opera was what we might graciously call different. Actually, we probably wouldn't even call it singing. It was more like shrieking.

The evening's saving grace for me — culture vulture that I am — was the overhead screen where priceless English translations were projected. Most of the translations made absolutely no sense whatsoever and didn't seem to have any particular bearing on what was transpiring on stage. It got to the point where many in the audience were paying more attention to the translations than to the production and there was considerable albeit muffled laughter.

It would be fair to say there is a real need for English-speaking translators there and elsewhere throughout China. But most of the fractured English was great fun and totally charming, especially the names.

In Beijing, we had a translator named Richard. His given name was a protracted Chinese word so we asked him if Richard was the English translation. No, he said. His professor at the University — a retired American — had just given him the name Richard — for no particular reason apparently.

And, in hotels in Hong Kong, we encountered a waiter named "Charlze" and a waitress named "Goria."

The White Swan Hotel in Guangzhou (formerly Canton) had a booklet in the room that featured pictures of famous guests. Under a photo of Richard Nixon was this caption: "President Richard Nixon stayed at the White Swan Hotel on Sept. 9, 1985, which left him a great impression on his mind." (Hmmm. So that's what happened. Sorry. No more Richard Nixon jokes.)

GUILIN

I've never been particularly taken with Chinese landscape paintings, probably because so many include those surrealistic, funny-looking mountains. You know the ones I mean with the jagged peaks that are totally unreal and a figment of the painter's imagination, right?

Wrong. They're real mountains and they're in Guilin.

The books say Guilin has a "karst" topography created by years of being under the sea. Some 200,000,000 years ago, the ocean floor pushed up as the result of crustal movements, they say, and land emerged. Then there was more water and land emerged again creating the limestone formations called karst.

The result is the most bizarre and spectacular landscape we've ever seen. The pinnacles are small but plentiful and each seems to differ in shape from the next — they're round and pointed and jagged and smooth and incredible. Many peaks conceal caves filled with stalagmites and stalactites. We visited one called the Reed Flute Cave which was most effectively lit and seemed to go on forever.

The highlight of the Guilin visit was unquestionably a full day's boat trip down the Li River, which winds around the strange hills, and along banks that boast water buffalo and rice paddies. Fishermen on narrow bamboo rafts float down the river with captive cormorants that catch fish but can't swallow them because of rings around their necks.

When we got to the end of the trip, in a town called Yangshuo, there was a fisherman on the pier who asked us to pay 2 yuan (about 50 cents) to take a picture of him with his cormorant. I paid once and shot several times.

From the pier, it was on to the marketplace in search of bargains. Clearly, China has cottoned to tourism and natives, who may not speak too much English can all say, "Hello. Lookee, lookee." And, if you should happen to let your eyes wander for more than a second to any object, the more aggressive vendors crowd around you saying, "very beautiful." It actually became aggravating after awhile even for those of us who are inveterate shoppers.

Bargaining is a way of life in China and most vendors include the phrase, "how much?" in their vocabulary. If they can't count in English, they show you a piece of cardboard with the numbers written down.

It's a little game.

You play, then they play.

We found that prices in China were unbelievable — actually beyond incredible for the quality of the work. For instance, we bought a brightly-colored quilted, long-sleeved jacket at a stall outside a restaurant for only $5 by the time the bargaining was over.

It took a while to figure out where you could and could not bargain. Hotels were iffy — some did, some didn't. And sometimes, when you figured out the price in American dollars and knew what we'd pay here for like merchandise, you didn't care whether they bargained or not.

There were, of course, some on the trip who could not bear shopping, including several of the guides. But, most of the travellers — even if they didn't start out as ardent shoppers — became addicted after a few forays into the shops.

The Chinese government has set up Friendship Stores in many larger towns and cities which cater to tourists. We made several brief visits to these stores in several cities but time did not permit much in-depth shopping.

Many of us did our shopping in hotel gift shops, most of which were not only excellent but exceptionally reasonable by American standards. We bought an unlined silk embroidered kimono for one son for about $20. Beautiful cloisonne bracelets were just a few dollars and prints and paintings were not much more.

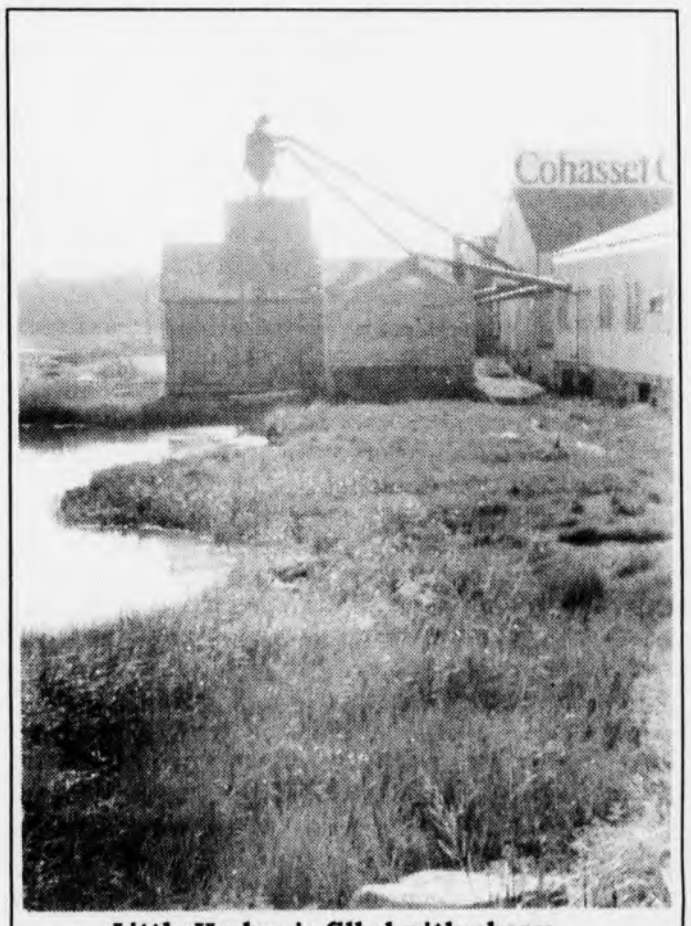
FLOWERS FOR DRYING:

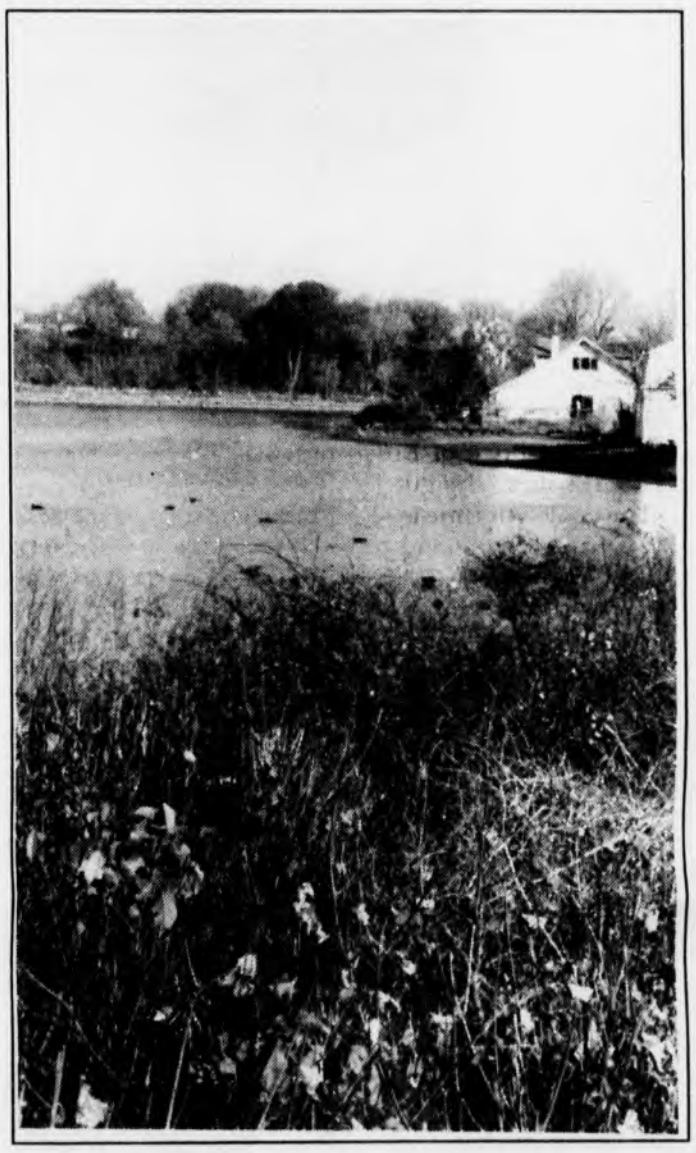
Gardener and dried flower person Joan Kenworthy will teach all about drying flowers, Thursday, Sept. 19, 7 - 9 pm. Members/$10. Non-members/$13. Discover what flowers, herbs, weeds, and pods can be used in arrangements, wreaths, etc. Learn where to find them, when to cut them, and how to dry them. Lots of lore, information, and demonstration. Make a tussie mussie to take home.

SPECIAL EVENT



Saturday, Sept. 21, 10 am - 4 pm, will be the "corniest" day you'll ever enjoy at the Science Center's traditional harvest celebration. Admission: $4 adults, $2 children under 14, free for children under 2. Enjoy music, food, traditional craft demonstrations, the scarecrow parade, storytelling, games, canoe raffle, and more.

Scout your garden now for the weirdest, wackiest vegetable or fruit to enter in the "Weird Vegetable Competition" (call the Center to register). The Center is seeking donations of used books, home-baked goods, and white elephant items for the Festival. Please call (617) 659-2559 if you have items to donate or drop them by the Center.



MAYBE MONSTERS

Uncover a unicorn! Discover a dragon! Meet a mermaid! In "Maybe Monsters," appearing in Vine Hall Sept. 1 through Dec. 1, you'll encounter a bizarre collection of real-life animals that may have been the inspiration for some of our favorite myths, legends, and monsters! Cyclops, vampires, werewolves — they're all here. In addition, you'll see the latest evidence for and against modern-day "monsters" such as Bigfoot, the Loch Ness Monster, and the Abominable Snowman. You can cast your vote as to whether you think they're really out there! Donations accepted.

The non-profit South Shore Natural Science Center is located on Jacobs Lane, Norwell, just off Route 123 and one mile from Route 3, Exit 13. Hours: 10 am to 4 pm, Monday through Saturday; 12 - 4 pm, Sunday. All programs require prepaid registration. The Center also features a museum store, six nature trails, picnic facilities, and a nature lending library.

Little Harbor is filled with charm.

The marshland in front of Cohasset Colonials is lush these days.

NATIONAL BABY SAFETY WEEK SEPTEMBER 8 - 14TH

A Reminder During Baby Safety Week . . .

. . . DO IT RIGHT, YOUR CHILD IS WORTH IT!

Simply sitting your child in a restraint won't guarantee a safe trip. Car seats must be used correctly. Every trip. Even if it means extra moments adjusting and buckling.

Careless mistakes with restraints have killed children in crashes. So please follow all the usage directions carefully. Your Child is worth every effort to get it right!*

A. Frederick Petersen

A. Frederick Petersen, 85, the husband of Edith Petersen, and a summer resident of Tenants Harbor, Maine, died Aug. 6, at Rockport.

A resident of Placida, Fla., he was born to August F.B. Petersen and Miriam C. Treat Petersen in Cohasset, where he lived the greater portion of his life.

Mr. Petersen served in the U.S. Navy Seabees during World War II.

He was in the real estate business on the South Shore of Massachusetts, where he was a member of the Old Boston Real Estate Board, Plymouth County Board of Realtors, boards of selectmen, public welfare and assessors for the Town of Cohasset, and was a water commissioner.

He was a charter member of the Cohasset Rotary Club, a member of the Konohasset Lodge, AF & AM, the Old Goats Luncheon Club, and member of The Second Congregational Church of Cohasset and of Rotonda Elks Lodge of Florida.

In addition to his wife, he leaves two sisters, Constance P. Parker of Sun City, Fla., Marjorie P. Moebius of Mashpee, Mass.; and several nieces, nephews and two stepsons.

Mr. Petersen's ashes were scattered at sea from Tenants Harbor and a memorial service will be scheduled later in Florida.

Memorial donations may be made to the scholarship fund of The Lemon Bay W.C., P.O. Box 512, Englewood, Fla. 34295-0512.

Pat Boylan delights the children and stimulates their imagination, and even interests some in becoming puppeteers themselves. Admission is $2 per person at the door.

China trip provides a primitive charm

China was a true shopper's paradise and if we ever have a chance to return we will surely spend more time browsing the shops.

PEOPLE

The guide books say there are slightly more than a billion people in China which is nearly 10 times the total population of this country.

Many have asked whether the Chinese people like Americans. It's honestly pretty hard to tell because there is such a total language barrier even in places where there probably shouldn't be, like Hong Kong which has been a British Crown Colony since 1842.

But there is the international language of smiles and most Chinese that we encountered did smile at us and wave to the tour buses, reminiscent of the farmers in the more remote areas of Ireland who wave to the Yanks.

We were encouraged by Herb, our American tour guide provided by Pacific Delight, not to discuss politics except with other members of the tour. We adhered to that advice. He also gave us some common sense phrases to stay away from like "Red Chinese" and other political or demeaning phrases of the same ilk.

We asked him what the Chinese think of Americans and he replied, "They think Americans are nice but they're all old." Of course, they do, because most people they see on these tours are senior citizens who can afford the time and money to take a two-week trip.

In fact, our national guide, provided by the Chinese government, thought I was one of those senior folks. She thought I was my travelling companion (and high school classmate's) mother.

"Your daughter?" she asked brightly one day on the bus, referring to Susan.

"No," I muttered, after retrieving my chin from my chest. "She's my age."

"But, her hair ... she has no ... grey," the guide continued, pointing to my hair.

"She just uses a different hairdresser," I stammered, trying to explain my friend's blonde locks.

"Ah, but you must have had a much harder life," the guide pressed. I shrugged and gave up trying to explain. Needless to say, Susan was beside herself with delight to think that someone thought I was her mother. Don't even ask if the little rat brought it up more than frequently in conversation.

Later that week, as I sat in the hotel room writing postcards in the afternoon and Susan napped with the bedspread pulled up around her, the night porter came in to turn down the beds. He smiled at me and leaned over my friend trying to get a closer look at her.

"Ah, your daughter," he cooed. "No," I screamed, nearly knocking him over.

The Chinese don't seem to turn grey, you see, until they're very old. (Note to my children — "very old" doesn't mean in your 40's.)

Speaking of children, Chinese children may not be the cutest in the world but they're mighty close. We saw children everywhere and they were absolutely beautiful with their rosy cheeks and high cheekbones.

Parents dote on them, which my travelling companion said was understandable because China adheres to the single birth policy. How much better, she said, to have one that is adored rather than two, three, four or more that you have no time for.

MAO'S TOMB

Probably one of the eeriest things we did was visit Mao Zedong's tomb in the vast (100 acres) Tian An Men Square in Beijing. We were told to line up — four abreast — if we chose to go through the mausoleum built in 1977 and see the embalmed body of the man who founded the People's Republic of China and guided it through its first 27 years. He died in 1976.

You march in lines of four up to another waiting point and then another and finally you climb the steps to the mausoleum. Inside are beautiful, fresh flowers everywhere and the entombed body of Chairman Mao, guarded by grim-looking soldiers.

It was an incredible feeling not only to be walking across historic Tian An Men Square but also to view Mao's Mausoleum.

HONG KONG

Probably our least favorite place was Hong Kong.

True, the city is beautiful and features spectacular mountain scenery. But it was also a complete departure from the naivete and charm of China. Hustlers were everywhere. Young men approached us on nearly every street corner to ask if we wanted to buy fake Rolex watches. There was a sign on the hotel room door that advised you not to give out your room number, if you made a purchase to be delivered, and you were warned to be extremely careful of your purse and other belongings. It was like being in New York City and we weren't ready for that kind of culture shock after China.

Hong Kong has always had a reputation as a shopper's paradise. Prices are great, they say, and maybe they are for some things and depending on your perception of affordable. If you consider $400 for a strand of cultured pearls a great deal, rather than paying $800 here, then I guess Hong Kong is for you. We didn't think there were any particularly great deals — on our budget — for anything in Hong Kong.

The colony reverts to China in 1997 — when Britain's 99-year lease of the territory runs out — and many residents are concerned about the future of Hong Kong.

Our guide said that children are learning Mandarin now in the schools to prepare for the takeover and that many people who can afford it have moved out of Hong Kong. She could not move, she said, because she could not afford to.

PHOTOGRAPHS

We had the persistent feeling throughout the trip that we missed more great photos than we got. China is an absolute photographer's dream and it wouldn't take a brilliant cameraman to get brilliant photos. Everywhere you looked there was something even more fabulous than what you just shot.

I took a ton of film (in a protective lead bag, of course) and ended up buying more. In Hong Kong, I had 20 rolls developed in Hong Kong — at a Foto-Mat believe it or not — which was a lot of fun because we could share the pictures with the other tour members.

There is much, more more we could write about China if space and time allowed. There are dozens of spectacular monuments and wonderful cities and towns that we didn't even mention.

Two weeks isn't very long and we certainly could never claim to be any kind of an expert on China, but we do hope to return there if we should have the opportunity. It's a delightful, scenic country that seems to be entering the modern world too fast with the influx, in cities like Beijing, of fast food restaurants, including McDonalds, and other Western imports. But there remains a very basic, primitive charm about China that I hope they'll never lose.

Chamber of Commerce gets down to business

By Lisa B. Eigner
Mariner staff

The theme of the Sept. 11 Chamber of Commerce meeting was revitalization.

"We've got to get back to the basics," said Robert Martin, Chamber president. "Revitalize means bringing in new life, and we certainly have that capacity. Things change and we have to be aware of it."

Their common goal is to revitalize the community. Their attempt will be to acknowledge change and learn to benefit from it. Their time is now..

"Cohasset Village... let's get down to business!" urged Chamber of Commerce President Bob Martin.

The meeting, held at the South Shore Art Center, marked the first step of a new effort by the citizenship and businesses of Cohasset toward long-range thinking and making the village more appealing to outsiders.

Held in open forum fashion, the meeting allowed a stream of new ideas to flow from audience members.

"If we begin denying change," said Planning Board Chairman Alfred S. Moore, Jr., "it'll bite us where we least expect it."

Moore, Martin, and the audience at large, were in agreement that a complete sharing of ideas and resources between the town boards and committees is vital.

"As an organization, we're committed to helping land and business owners improve their property," said Design Review Board member Maxwell Pounder.

Pounder, who offered several suggestions toward enhancing the existing business area, claimed that the town must move away from becoming a "static environment."

"The business district could improve its appearance with such minimal changes as lighted windows, exterior flower boxes, interior lighting, colored awnings, and varied window displays," he said.

According to Pounder, the town is too small to support any serious retail business without becoming more attractive to potential consumers. "We have to draw in more outsiders."

With a common agenda of keeping resident's buying localized and attracting out-of-town buyers, the Chamber of Commerce knows they have an uphill road ahead.

"My first thoughts about buying have always led me to the Hanover Mall to shop instead of thinking about buying locally," said businessman Keith Knowles. "Local merchants need our money to survive."

"It's a matter of course," he urged, "that we, as citizens, shop within our own community."

Uniqueness and cosmetics. Two fundamental points that the chamber agrees must be instilled into the minds of residents and businesses alike.

A sketch of plans for Government Island

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

The Boston Architectural Center will layout the plans for renovation of the duplex at Government Island at no cost to the town — unless you count the cost of having town counsel draft a letter and look over all the paperwork.

The point is: the school will do the work without charge.

Joseph McElroy, the man behind the idea of creating a nonprofit corporation to take over the property, said the terms of the contract between his group and the school will be worked out this week.

But a student has already been assigned to the project. The student, Matthew Leak, toured the property Sept. 14 with George Kovach, the man responsible for negotiating with the school.

Kovach took the lead for the citizens group to deal with the school, which is located on Newbury Street.

McElroy said the historical aspects of the building are of great interest to the school and will be part of the final plan.

He said that no date has been set for the selectmen to begin negotiating terms of a lease of the property with his group. He expects the next step will be for the board

Safe Homes works at communication

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

Last year the Drug and Alcohol Education Committee managed to attract about a third of the families with teen-agers in its effort to stop youngsters from drinking.

The Safe Homes program began one year ago. It aims at making it less likely teens will feel peer pressure to drink or drug.

Now the committee is ready to again solicit support for its simple program.

By the beginning of October every home in town with a teen-ager should receive a mailing from the committee. Deadline to sign the new contract is Nov. 9.

Keith Knowles, committee chairman, said his statis-

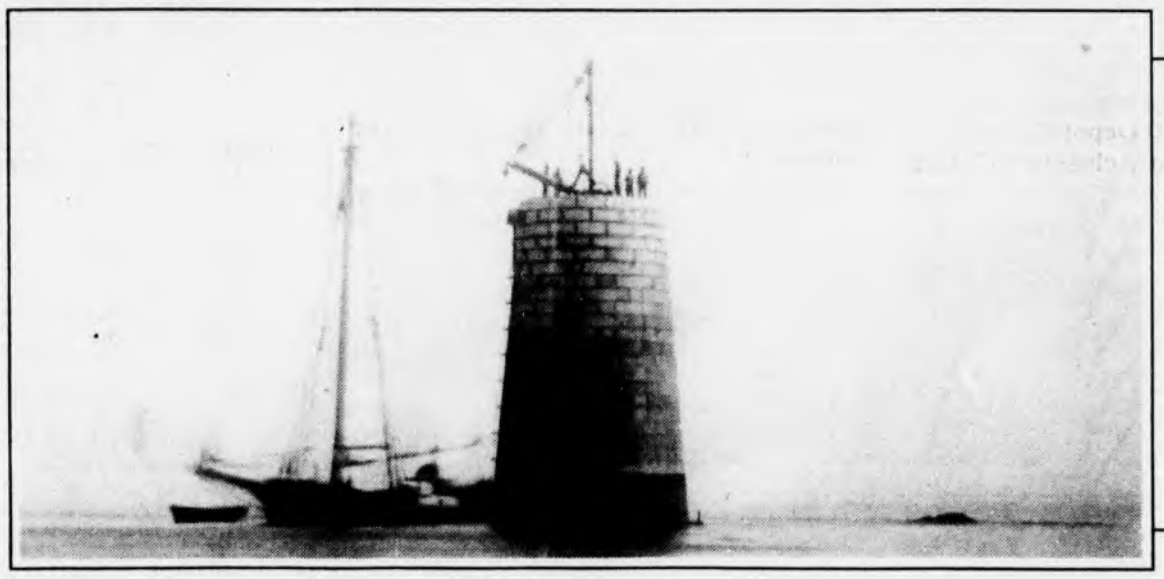
Cook & Ingber as advisors



Two residents were given seats on the advisory board Tuesday, Sept. 17, by the town's appointing authority, which is known as the Troika.

Deborah Cook of King Street and Kenneth Ingber of Woodland Drive were appointed by the unanimous vote of the authority, which consists of Town Moderator William Weeks, Selectman Chairman Ned Tebbetts and Advsiory Board Chairman Arne Gjesteby.

Karin Bartow was nominated for the board by Gjesteby who said it was too bad there weren't three seats open. Her nomination was not seconded.

The new appointments mean that Gjesteby can immediately step down from the board, having finished his second three-year term in July.

Gjesteby said the board will meet Thursday night to reorganize.

Eaton appointed to bylaws

Louis Eaton was appointed to the town bylaw committee to replace Cornelia O'Malley.

Mrs. O'Malley who has been on the committee since its beginning chose not to seek a new appointment. She is 85, according to Town Moderator William Weeks.

Eaton's appointment was by unanimous vote of the appointing authority.

In other business of the appointing authority, Thomas Cook of King Street was reappointed to a new term on the drainage advisory committee.

Override being planned

Outgoing advisory board chairman Arne Gjesteby said the proposed police contract is a "good one." But he wants the Oct. 7 special town meeting to reject the terms.

The contract provides no raise this year but give 4 percent raises in 1992 and 1993. It also has a minimum manning clause — which is not new.

Referring to the continuing state budget crunch, Gjesteby said there would be no question that the town faces another override vote next year.

He asked where the cuts could be made if the town votes against the override.

"The contract calls for more than what we can afford to give without an override," Gjesteby said.

"The fire department has minimum manning too. Where will the cuts come from — the schools and library?" he asked.

Selectman Chairman Ned Tebbetts pointed out that Gjesteby's wife, Martha, was one of the four selectmen who voted for the new police contract.

He also pointed out that the police raise amounts to 2 and 2/3 percent a year over its three-year life.

Gjesteby said Cohasset may face the same problems as Chelsea in the future. Chelsea, which is in receivership, is involved in a court fight to avoid complying with the minimum manning requirements of its fire department contract.

"Cohasset and Chelsea are different situations," Tebbetts said. "Chelsea is poor. Cohasset is affluent.

Tebbetts said he agrees the town faces another override question next year. He said he would support it.

CC Center overflows

The Cohasset Community Center is having a growth spurt, according to Director Judith Volungis, and has expanded its programming space to include classes at 9 Depot Court.

"We have too many classes to handle in a building this size," said Volungis, who was overwhelmed with last-minute registrations for fall classes.

The Community Center has leased space on Depot Court in order to compensate for the large influx of community interest.

"We needed more space to accommodate more people," she indicated.

All Yoga, Tai Chi, Baton, and Future Kid programs have subsequently moved across the street from the Community Center and will be held there for the duration of the session.

Safe Homes works . . .

tics show 600+ young people in grades 6 to 12 in town with kids. His names come from the school department but they include private school students as well as those in the town system.

About 200 of young people were involved in the Safe Homes program last year, as their parents signed contracts promising to keep alcohol away from minors in the home. The contract also talks about adult supervision.

"Nothing is totally safe," Knowles said as he readied to begin the second year of the Safe Homes program.

He said there is no way a parent can make sure alcohol is never used by minors in a home.

"But this opens the line of communication — especially between the parents. It's a start," he said.

The actual Safe Homes promise says:

"I will not provide nor condone the illegal use of drugs or alcohol in my home or on my property; and I will not allow parties in my home or on my property when I am not present."

What a parent gets for signing the contract is a list of the names of all the other families in town who are participating.

Parents who do allow liquor to be served in their homes to anyone under 21 face legal and civil liability.

The pamphlet states:

"Parents are concerned about the alarming increase in drug and alcohol use among our youth, and the social acceptibility of this use.

"• Drinking with peers usually starts at the junior high level and increases with age.

"• Alcohol and drugs are a leading cause of teen-age robberies and vandalism.

"• The leading cause of death of teenagers in our country is auto accidents, which frequently involve drugs of alcohol.

"Young people must be able to feel that it is OK not to participate in the use of drugs or alcohol. Cohasset parents need to take a stand to endorse the Safe Homes program, to let our children know we care and are taking the initiative to deal with problems of alcohol and drug use."
